Touching the slanders against the private life of Grover Cleveland, after quoting a few of the silly explanations of thick and thin republican sheets, the Chicago Herald says: "Scribes, pharisees and hypocrites! The authors and circulators of this calumny know full well that it cannot and will not be answered. True or false, it will stand as they have uttered it. No reputable person in Buffalo, the scene of the romance, can be found to father it. Every one who has been questioned concerning it professes ignorance or disbelief. It may be an invention or it may not. As to that it matters little. It is a charge which it is easy to make, and of which disproof is out of the question. To attempt an answer would involve the subject of the report, though he was chaste as ice, in an endless maze of scandal."

The truly good republican protection twilight organ in Detroit holds up its hands in holy horror if a rival distances it in publishing a scandalous or sensational story, and sells a few extra papers; but its readiness to follow such a lead proves that its manager is but human. For a paltry fee his columns are disgraced, and in a subsequent issue he makes a weak attempt to justify himself by saying "the public demand the news." The press comes to be a conservator of public morals when it panders to the lowest elements of society. This may serve its purpose as a campaign slander, but its author will become a partisan in the minds of the people, and will cease to command the respect due an independent journal, as it has paraded itself in the past. It strives to become the circulating medium of a mess of vile stuff it once denounced in other journals, and now vindicates its promises made to the public when it was established. The story will injure no one more than the scurrilous journals that gave it circulation.

This is the name of a new steamer just launched at Grand Haven, by Capt. Reuben Vanderhoef, for the excursion and coast trade. She is 95 feet keel, 18 feet beam, 8 feet hold. Her machinery is entirely new and very powerful. Capt. Vanderhoef came to Charlevoix last Thursday to look over our trade, and has decided to run between here and Harbor Springs two trips a day, besides evening and Sunday excursions. Her time from Petoskey to Charlevoix last Friday morning was one hour and 25 minutes, and we understand even this has since been shortened. This week the boat has been quite well patronized by resorters, which we hope to see continue. This route will be a positive benefit to Charlevoix to the extent of bringing resorters here from Petoskey and Harbor Springs, who would not come on either of the other boats with their present running time. It also gives business men an opportunity to go from place to place, transact business and return the same day. We hope it will prove a profitable route for the boat.

ROMANCE OF A "CUSS-WORD."

BY EUGENE FIELD.

Fraud expanse of shiny shirt-front,
Cuffs and collar white to match,
Overcoat with silken facing—
Just the rig to make a catch.

Pretty lady coming toward him!
He prepares to make a mash;
Meets a dazzling horse on crossing,
Mud lies over him with a splash.

Man who looked so sweet and gentle,
Like a little suckling lamb,
Now becomes a raving lion—
Girl once by and hears him d—n.

Girl is shocked in sound expression;
Thinks his language vicious, vile;
Yet believes that she can save him—
Meets him next time with a smile.

Man apologizes heavily;
Says his anger made him rash.
Girl replies it is convinced her
He's a man of proper dash.

They are married in November;
Wife is over all her sense;
Says she thought him soft and sickish
Till the day she heard him swear.

THE DOCTOR'S ADVENTURE.

BY SARA B. ROSS.

The following story is a true one, with the exception of the names, which are slightly changed, as there are descendants of some of the characters still living in the city of Buffalo. The conversations no one could be sure of at this time.]

It was during the war known as the war of 1812 that Dr. Anthony Chartre was practicing medicine in the city of Buffalo, if it could then be called a city. He was a dashing young bachelor, and had turned the heads of more than one of the belles of the town; but had at last succumbed to the charms of a fair damsel, Miss Jennie St. Jarvis, a niece of the widow St. Jarvis, who had a large mansion upon one of the principal streets.

The Doctor, however, was troubled a little with bashfulness, and had deferred making a proposal from time to time, until one day he had determined he would not leave his divinity until he had put the question and knew what his fate was to be.

He had, however, but just seated himself by the fair girl's side, when a knock was heard upon the door of the parlor in which he sat. When the door was opened a 12-year-old boy was disclosed, who asked in a frightened voice, "Is Dr. Chartre here?"

"He is," replied Miss Jennie.

"Wal," said he, hurriedly, "there is a man up south what's broke his leg, and he wants the Doctor to come right off and set it."

The Doctor swallowed his chagrin, and asked:

"How far is it?"

"Nigh a little south of the corners. He 'lowed we be to come right along with you, sir."

"Very well; I will get with you immediately."

He made his adieus to the young lady in as very tender manner, and was soon upon his way, with the tow-headed urchin as a guide. It was a beautiful day, the air was clear and bracing, and the young Doctor soon felt his disturbed as his way, regardless of the open mouth and eyes of the astonished lad.

They had ridden at least ten miles when the boy turned aside from the road down a wooded lane, saying: "This way, mister."

The Doctor followed and soon came in sight of a neat-looking block house and a large barn, where a man in his patient oxen stood chewing their cuds in the yellow sunlight. The clearing stopped in a gentle incline to the shores of Lake Erie, which could not have been more than a half mile distant.

It was a lovely spot, and the Doctor stopped for a moment to admire the grove of graceful pine trees which on one side grew almost up to the door of the cabin.

He then rapped lightly and the door was opened by a slender young girl with dark grey eyes, and a wealth of beautiful golden hair, which was worn in heavy braids round round and round the well-shaped head.

She was clad in the homespun linen garments of the time, and was devoid of all the little fripperies which characterize the dress of the young ladies of the town.

"The Doctor?" she asked, in a low, sweet voice.

The Doctor bowed his head in response.

"Step this way then," said the girl, leading the way, through the low red door which led into a small chamber.

The sufferer was a man in the prime of life, and was bearing his pain with the quiet of a hero. His wife was by his side, and the two women stood by when the fractured limb was set, and ministered to the wants of the patient as assisted the Doctor with perfect calmness and self-possession. When all was over Mrs. Atwood said, "You must wait for supper, Doctor; Dolly will have it ready in a few moments."

The Doctor decided to wait, for he was feeling hungry, as he had missed his dinner and it was now nearly 4 o'clock.

He sat watching the graceful girl as she peeled the large white potatoes for the oven, and fried the silvery fish fresh from the lake near by, and before he was aware of it, he found himself comparing her with the so slightly but somewhat affected Jennie St. Jarvis, and it must be said his comparisons were not in favor of the latter young lady.

It was 5 o'clock when he again remounted his horse, and when he reached the main road he was surprised to see it filled with men, women, and children, all hurrying southward in the greatest state of excitement and alarm.

"What is the matter?" he asked, in astonishment, of a lady with whom he was acquainted.

"Oh, Doctor," was the reply, "fly for your life; the British and Indians are in Buffalo, breaking open the stores and pillaging the houses, and not a soldier this side of Batavia."

And she hurried on without stopping for further words.

The Doctor was in a quandary. He had left behind him in his office a large sum of money in gold, and he disliked to lose it greatly, and as his office was in a retired part of the city, he resolved to proceed carefully, and, if possible, secure this before it fell into the hands of the enemy.

He questioned some others, and found that the town was almost entirely deserted, and that these were the very last of the flying people, who had scatte od in every direction. He put spurs to his horse, but the shades of night overtook him before he had half accomplished his journey, and the light of burning buildings began to light up the darkness of the evening.

He hurriedly rode on, however, and by avoiding the half-drunken soldiery and the yelling demons who had congregated around Bert's large store, which they had ransacked and then set fire to, he managed to reach his office without being seen, and found that it had not been broken into. He secreted his money upon his person, filled his medicine case to its fullest extent, placed in his pockets several bottles of the best brandy, and was about to endeavor to steal away as he had come, when he was confronted by a red-faced English captain and two horribly painted Indians.

"Aha, my boy, you're our prisoner," said the Englishman, patting him upon the shoulder.

"Deliver up your arms, and tell us where there may be any little valuables; this building will be ashes in half an hour."

"I am not armed," replied the Doctor, "and as to my pills, you may swallow them all, if you like."

"A saw-bones, eh? Here, Englet; and you, Blackchief, take this fellow to the Colonel, upon the square."

The Doctor was marched off between the two Indians, but the Colonel was not found upon the square, but in the house of the widow St. Jarvis, who was cooking a supper for the English officers, and whose house was filled with silks and merchandise from the various stores of the plundered town.

The lady and her niece, Miss Jennie St. Jarvis, seemed to be in the best of spirits when the Doctor was led in between the two Indians. The elder lady was joking with the Englishmen about the flying Yankees, and the younger was promenading up and down the hall with the officer for whom they were waiting. During the bustling of the familiarity of old friends, and the arm of the drunken officer was thrown lightly about the fair young lady's waist.

"Ah, Doctor," said Mrs. St. Jarvis, "So you couldn't keep pace with the others in their flight?"

The Doctor's only reply was a frigid bow, and one of the Indians, Englet, pressing the pointed bayonet of his officer who was walking with Miss St. Jarvis.

"A prisoner did you say? Where is he?" said the officer, pausing.

The Indian pointed to Dr. Chartre, and the Colonel came forward, still with his arm about Miss Jennie's waist. She colored slightly when she saw the Doctor, but she said no word and endeavored to appear as if she was an utter stranger.

"Are you a surgeon, sir?" asked the Colonel.

"I am," replied Dr. Chartre.

"Very well," was the reply. "You may take him across the river, men, and have him attend to those fellows who were wounded this afternoon, and then bring him to Col. Butler."

The Indians resumed their silent march, and the Doctor was hurried through the town to the shore, to endure the insults of the hilarious soldiers and Indians with stern, set lips, and disdained to say a word in reply.

At the shore Englet again left them, but very soon returned with a strong but light canoe. The Doctor was placed in the center seat, and, with an Indian in each end, the canoe started to go down the river for a short distance, and then to cross the river to the Canadian side.

As soon as they were well started, the Doctor drew from his pocket a bottle of brandy, and, knocking out the cork was about to pretend to drink, when Englet said: "Ugh, no take."

The Doctor handed him the bottle in a reluctant manner, and then took another from his pocket, which was quickly snatched from his hand by the silent Blackchief, and the Doctor had the gratification of seeing them both take long and hearty drinks of the strong liquor.

It was not long before Englet began an excited and drunken quarrel with his companion, which was responded to with short, surly answers in the most defiant tone; tomahawks were brandished, and the Doctor feared he was in greater danger than before, but in a short time the liquor did its expected work upon Englet and he fell in a drunken slumber, face downward, in the bottom of the canoe.

The Doctor moved slightly to bring Blackchief directly under his eye, but he saw by the fierce exclamation and ugly lifted tomahawk that it would be a perilous business to attack him unarmed, and his heart almost sank within him as he saw the lights on the Canadian shore momentarily grow nearer and nearer.

However, to his intensest joy, he saw the Indian again apply the bottle to his lips, and the Doctor saw in a few moments that his stroke grew unsteady, and, striving hard against the potent liquor, the Indian bent every energy to his paddling, but in vain; his hand slipped from the oar, his head began to nod, and, seizing the fellow boldly, the Doctor threw him overboard into the stream. He then turned his attention to Englet, who was snoring loudly in the bottom of the canoe. To deal with him as he had the other was only the work of a moment, and then the Doctor seized the paddle, and, with a sigh of relief, started to paddle out of reach for up the lake.

He was still in the greatest danger, for the water was lit up for miles with the light of the burning town, and canoes were crossing to and fro every few moments.

The Doctor, however, was wary, and managed to elude them all; and morning found him quilled and damp several miles up in about the centre of the lake. He turned his canoe toward the American shore, and as he neared his way slowly along with his blistered hands, he thought of the woman he once thought he had loved, false to her country, false to him—and worse than all—false to her own womanly modesty.

He got near the quiet, lonely shore at about 10 o'clock in the day. A forest of middle-sized pine trees came down to the water's edge, and the Doctor fastened his canoe and climbed upon the little ledge which bordered the shore. About half a mile inland he saw a light cabin and a large barn near by which stood two large oxen chewing their cuds in the sun. Could it be possible? Yes, it was the cabin of Mr. Atwood, the man whose limb he had set the day before, but which seemed weeks agone to the chilled and weary Doctor.

He made his way to the cabin and met Dolly Atwood at the door, who gave him the welcome information that the soldiers had arrived from Batavia, and the British and Indians had evacuated the smoking ruins of what had once been called Buffalo.

The Doctor stayed with the hospitable farmer until the 1st of January, built, but together with Dolly Atwood he rode into the town a week after it was burnt, and saw the dire destruction the conflagration left.

Mrs. St. Ja vis was almost the only building left standing.

When he set up his office in newly built Buffalo Dolly Atwood was his wife.

Miss St. Jarvis returned to her home in the East shortly afterward, having learned by the coolness of the young people who once were her friends, that her treachery was known; but the Doctor's marriage was the worst blow to her pride, for between two stools she had met with a fall, as she never met the English Colonel afterward.

A Crick in the Back.

If there is one thing we know more about than another, it is a crick in the back, and on the other hand, if there is one thing we know less about, it is that same crick in the back. That is, we experience its horrors and know nothing of its origin, and nothing will prevent it when it is due. A man may sleep until his nose, if it was a pair of pulling horses, exercise with dumbbells, go through a gymnasium and try all the appliances for developing muscle, and avail of every means that his back will break, and it will be all right. And yet some day he will be putting on his overcoat, or reaching across his desk for a photograph of his girl, or pick up a paper off the floor, and the crick catches him, and he is down like a tornado. Crash! a baby may be in the room. Bang! sleeping children may be smothering. Ding, dong, ding! An old man, feeble and rheumatic, may be approaching in smoke. Look out! the strong man, blistered with flames, is yelling for his boiled eggs. He tries to crick his back at his muscle, and almost wakes somebody would pitch onto him to wring him, when he finds that he is confined to the filling out of his antagonist. He often looks up in an impudent manner at a tough citizen, who has chased for an excuse to thump him, and if a lady was insulted in his presence he feels that he would make a hero of himself in her defence. He wants something to occur that will give him an opportunity to show that though he is confined to an office, and does no hard work, that he is endowed with herculean strength, and it would be a cinch for him to do ordinary man to tackle him. But when the crick is due by schedule time, and shows upon his back, the great, powerful man is a perfect baby, and he is afraid of a child on a handsled. It is then that he wants an air revolver and carries it when he goes down town nights, for fear he will be assaulted. Before the crick arrives he just aches to have sandbaggers and footpads attack him, and as he walks along he picks out places where he would knock sand-bag users down, and in his mind has them corded up all along the streets, but after the crick comes, a living sled-ton with a pail of sausage would drive him all over town.—Peck's Sun.

She Would Brave Her Ma.

On an Oakland boat there was a couple that the most superficial observer would set down as lovers. The young man drew from his pocket a small jewelry case, and pressing a spring displayed a handsome diamond ring.

"This is for you, dear," he said.

"Oh, my," she replied, "how pretty and how kind; but I really cannot accept it. What would ma say?"

"Oh, but you must accept it. I bought it for you."

"But, oh, George! really, you know, how can I? Ma doesn't allow me to take presents from gentlemen."

"All right, then; it's of no use to me. I'll give it to Mirandy——"

"What! Mirandy Smith, the horrid, red-headed thing? Rather than she should have it I'll brave ma and accept."

The Law in Regard to Animals.

Ordinarily wild animals are not protected. Any man may hunt and kill them. In some places, however, regulations are made to protect certain kinds of animals from hunters, so that the species may not become extinct.

Once confined and under the control of man, they become private property, and are protected as such. To take a deer out of a park, or a cow from a pasture, is stealing. The old Norman kings of England punished deer-stealing with death, but this law has been long a dead letter.

Animals that have a money value, such as cattle, sheep, and pigs, have always been considered, in law, as much private property as horses and lambs. Pet animals, like dogs and cats, were formerly held of little account. The man who stole a cow would be sent to prison for theft, but, if he stole a pet dog, he could not be prosecuted as a criminal. The owner, however, could sue him and recover damages for the loss. In later years laws were passed to cover this defect.

Owners of animals have always been liable for any mischief their pets may commit. Formerly they were not liable unless they knew their animals were dangerous. For example, the first time a dog killed sheep the owner was not obliged to pay, but the second time he was not excused.

A man may keep a fierce dog to protect his house from burglars, but must see to it that the dog is chained. If, then, he bites a person who carelessly comes too near the kennel, the owner is not responsible.

Modern laws hold a dog-owner responsible for the animal's acts, even if he thinks that the dog is not vicious. A mastiff as every dog is liable to become fierce, the law says that whoever keeps one must take his chances.

Any person may kill a dog that attacks him while out of control of its owner. If the dog is worrying cattle or sheep, anybody may kill it. However, the dog is protected while on the land of its owner.

Now-a-days nearly all countries have laws providing dog-owners with licenses to keep their animals. Unless every dog has an owner it is impossible for it, much damage would be done for which no one could be called upon to pay. Under these laws, owners of unlicensed dogs may be fined. The dogs themselves are killed by public officers who are specially charged with the duty.

In the ancient German empire a curious law was made of these animals. The Emperors Otho I. and Frederick Barbarossa condemned persons who were guilty of trying to stir up sedition, and disturb the peace of the public, to notoriety and derision. The offenders had to carry a dog upon their shoulders for a long distance.—Burlington Hawkeye.

CYCLONES.

How They Form and Travel.

Cyclones invariably come from the west, and travel in an eastern direction.

Scientists say "the general direction of movement of the tornado is invariably from a point in the southwest quadrant to a point in the northwest quadrant." A cyclone never travels from east to west. It rushes through the air left warm where the sun has passed. A cyclone never occurs on a cold day, never starts at night, and usually occurs in the afternoon.

The sun shines all day and in the afternoon gets a heat on some western plain or like place. It shines warmly.

The air becomes rarefied. The breath fails to supply the needed amount of oxygen, and one feels exhausted. There is a stillness that is oppressive, broken, perhaps, by little puffs that seem to come from a heated furnace. One feels a sickly sensation from the sun's rays. All this time the sun is shooting his heat right down at the spot as though he had been commanded to stand still and had concentrated his power on one little patch of his field of labor. The air becomes unnaturally heated. It is not in its normal condition. Things are not as they should be. Nature's system is getting out of order. The rarefied air begins to rise. It continues to heat. It rises some more. The colder air runs in at the sides to fill the vacuum and instantly the tornado is put in motion.

Did you ever see the pug pulled out of a horse trough and watch the water turn round and round as it ran out? That is the way the air turns round in a cyclone as it rushes in from all sides.

The earth is surrounded by air to a height of fifty or seventy miles, and that air has waves on its surface like waves on an ocean. The column of rarefied air that starts the cyclone draws on all sides for colder air, for the air that nature needs to establish the equilibrium, but instead of a gentle breeze or a brisk wind, the effort is so stupendous that the angry cyclone is the result; and the rushing column makes a round, loping out for restoring nature's equilibrium, but unmindful of the devastation worked on the face of the earth.

Therefore man must stand from under.

If one cares to see the principle of a cyclone starting he can do so by setting a heated smoothing iron where the liquid shines through a window. The small particles that are in the air will be seen to float toward the iron and on nearing it will rush upward in the column of heated air.

Did you ever see a whirlwind on a cold or windy day?

After the cyclone starts moving across the country its winds whirl round and round in this country in a direction opposite to that of the hands of a watch.

The signal observers give some interesting descriptions of the terrible work on cyclones just issued from the Government press says the sudden appearance of ominous clouds first in the northwest or northeast, or perhaps reversed in the order of their appearance, generally attracts the attention of the most casual observer. In almost all cases these premonitory clouds are unlike any ordinary formation. If they are light, their appearance resembles smoke issuing from a burning building or straw-stack, rolling upward in fantastic shapes to great heights. Sometimes they are like fine mist, or quite white like fog or steam. Some persons describe these light clouds as having apparently irridescent, or glowing as if a pale, whitish light issued from their irregular surface. If the clouds appear as waves dashed over her bow, and, rising aft, carried the hole of the lake-spring aft the main body of the storm, shadowed and gained. But almost instantly stood midmasted upon the bank of cool and collected scenes down upon the ground.

Ease her a little!" he cried to the man at the wheel. "Take a turn!" cries Jake, lower the foreyard!" Then you spanker boom on Wallack. Now she takes it." At this moment captain of the larboard watch appeared, with a pallid face. "Six inches ten foot of water in the hold!" "It ain't enough," cried the mate. "Break a hole aloft the pump, and stand more water than that, and I'll it."—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

An East India Version of the Flood.

In East India there is a legend ages ago mankind became so wicked that the gods determined to destroy it except just enough to begin with again. The exceptions were nearly all drowned during a feast in the open air in a golden palace on a mountain top. A boy and a girl, born of parents who were themselves good nor bad, had previously carried off by an eagle to their respective homes on the earth, their birth, and were brought up as male female figure of gold. When they were married, and a child born to them. The destruction of the wicked having been effected, the earth was thereby greatly peopled. So giants were sent to wait upon them. They used so much water that a famine was produced, and the wants of the child, wiping her hands in her apron, comes out on the steps and says: "The Lord bless you, gentlemen, but it was only our chimney; and the Lord bless you, I—" and the gang go home and play dominos. The horses stand waiting for the next, and just as willing to jump as the man who has been waiting an hour for a shave.—Toronto World.

The Shark, the Pollock and the Shad.

In the same inlet there lived a Shark, a Pollock and a Shad. The Shark was a hard tried and seldom exerted itself to do anything but prey on smaller fish for imprecation, and eat. The Pollock was a lively young fop, who was forever disporting himself with his hands and courting the best society. The Shad honestly attended to his business, letting his body into trim to be made into a Sardine.

"What a low-lived fellow Shad is," Pollock would say to Shad one day.

"Yes. There's something wrong about his character. I'm thinking. I'm not sure but we owe it to ourselves to wipe him out."

"Right you are; and if you will roll onto your back, and get ready for him, I'll drive him. The way Shad will gobble him up. Then will morality and good government be vindicated, and the whole neighborhood rid of a pest."

So the Shark got into position, and the Pollock made a dash for the unoffending Shad. The Shad, however, was out of its wits, rushed this way and that, and finally into the sepulcher presented by the Shark. The way Shad pursuit, and just as the grand object was consummated, the Shark gave a flip great oval, so that they appeared like a black, from the center to circumference, or if this deep jet color appears only at the center, gradually diminishing in intensity as the outer edges of the clouds or bank of clouds are approached. Sometimes these dark clouds instead of appearing in solid, heavy masses, roll up lightly but still into such black, like the smoke from an engine or locomotive burning soft coal. They have been described as of a purple or bluish tinge, and at times possessed of a strange livid-ness, or frequently dark green and again of an inky blackness that fairly startles you with its intensity. This mass of furiously boiling clouds, roaring like thunder, and if at night flashing with vivid lightning, strikes terror to the heart of the beholder. As the clouds approach from opposite directions they are suddenly thrown into the greatest commotion, breaking up as it were into small portions which dash pell mell over each other and in every direction, now dipping toward the earth, now rushing upward to considerable height, or at moderate elevations, rolling over each other in a whirl like a pack of dogs in a fight. Generally following closely upon the existence of this condition, the funnel shaped tornado cloud appears against the western sky, moving boldly to the front from without this confusion of flying clouds.

Old soldiers say if you see a cannon-ball in the air, and it appears to be standing still, you would better look out. If it appears to be moving, there is no danger for you. So with the cyclone. If it is moving from one side to another, you are safe; if it seems to be standing still and only growing larger, it is coming directly at you.—Atlanta Constitution.

Ice Made in the Tropics.

In the tropical climate, far distant from high mountains, as neither natural snow nor ice can be obtained, recourse is had to the cold generated by evaporation and the comparative coolness of the air a little before daybreak to manufacture ice in large quantities, and thus to supply a most grateful luxury at a moderate price. Ice is thus simply manufactured in a large way at Benares, Allahabad, and Calcutta, in the East Indies, where natural ice has never been seen.

On a large, open plain an excavation is made, about thirty feet square and two feet deep, on the bottom of which some cane or straw mats are evenly strewed to the height of about eight inches. On this bed are set rows of small, shallow, unglazed earthen pans, so porous that when filled with water the outsides are immediately covered with a thick dew oozing through them. Toward the dusk of the evening, the pans, previously smeared with butter, are filled with soft water, generally boiled, and let remain there during the night.

In the morning, before sunrise, the ice makers attend and collect from each pan a crust of ice, more or less thick, that adheres to its inner side, and it is put into baskets and carried without loss of time to the common receptacle, which is a deep pit in a high, dry situation, lined first with straw and then with old blanketing, where it is beaten down and congeals into a solid mass. The time of the varies exceedingly, sometimes amounting to more than half the contents of the pan, at other times scarcely a pailful. Clear and serene weather is the most favorable for its production, whatever may be the sensible heat of the atmosphere. The cold generated by the rapid evaporation round every part of the pan is the cause of this congelation. In this way ices are secured for the table, when the heat in the shade is very commonly above 100 degrees.

The Shark, the Pollock and the Shad.

In the same inlet there lived a Shark, a Pollock and a Shad. The Shark was a hard tried and seldom exerted itself to do anything but prey on smaller fish for imprecation, and eat. A Modest Competence

In the way of health is more commonly our share than an exuberance of that dear adorable. Let it be our aim to keep what we have got, not to waste the ill-used endowment by impaired living and working. It may be safely predicated of Hostetter's Bitters that he who uses it duly regulates the digestive, the liquid ministers which this medicine purifies, promotes, and preserves, the general vigor of human life, and thereby a steadily increasing, a really stupendous, aggregate of health and vigor. When a medicine is offered with fit on the troublesome tenant, dyspepsia, he speedily evacuates the premises, and it is no less potent in bringing a rebellious liver into subjection. Constipation yields to it, and rheumatism cannot succeed. Fever and ague flee its mere action. It is a sure regulator of the kidneys and bladder, and tranquilizes and tones the nerves. It lays a foundation of health upon which prudence may raise a lasting superstructure. Lastly, though not least, it is commended by the medical fraternity.

Sir Thomas and the Baby.

Lady Bloomfield, in her "Reminiscences of Court and Diplomatic Life," tells a curious anecdote about her own father, who isolated himself from the younger members of his family on account of his dislike to the noise of children.

"It is said," she writes, "that one day my father was walking in Portland place, when he met a nurse carrying a baby in her arms, and, being struck with the beauty of the infant, he inquired whose it was. The nurse, much astonished, answered:

"'Your own, Sir Thomas.'"

Dairymen Getting Rich.

Progressive dairymen, who are only satisfied with the best results, are rolling in their wealth and conferring a benefit on society by the rapid improvements they are making in the art of butter making. This cause more than all others, the increase of butter color, and know by actual test that it fills every claim made for it.

LIKE HIS FATHER,

He was Afflicted with Stone in the Bladder; also, like Him, was Cured by the Use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy of Rondout, N.Y.

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N.Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. The father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N.Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the best physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried FAVORITE REMEDY. After two cases use of it he passed a stone \, of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy deserves from public a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the FAVORITE REMEDY does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidneys and bladder complaints as well as all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females.

PAIN.

Pain is supposed to be the 1st of our mortal foes to be conquered, and before it any one thing stands so triumphant as Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It speedily subdues it, and like a sweet perfume it leaves the sufferer conscious of a victory gained. Pain is a monitor to tell us of something amiss in our system, and Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is a faithful monitor of disease.

Such a remedy is a most valuable boon to all Scientific Family to study.

East Jordan.

East Jordanites have not forgotten that campaigneting has already commenced at Petoskey, and are going to avail themselves of the opportunity to attend by going on the elegant pleasure steamer, Thomas Friant, which leaves East Jordan Sunday, Aug. 3d at 7 a. m. Dwight's Landing one half hour later, stopping at Ironton also.

The excursion under the auspices of, and for the benefit of the I. O. G. T. was a grand success all around. The evening was fine, the passengers lively but very orderly. The Queen of the Lakes arrived at Charlevoix early enough to give the party ample time to visit the rink, and other places of amusement, arriving home in good season. The affair netted the Good Templars $25.

Farmers are selling excellent new potatoes at 75 cts per bushel. They report buying about over and that wheat in this vicinity will be ready in some places within a week.

An attempt to organize and maintain a Blaine and Logan club, is meeting with partial success.

It has been a long time since we have had an entertainment in town.

East Jordan is full of visitors and others, who have come to stay which we think speaks well of our town.

Several vessels left the past week laden with bark and lumber, for Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities, and although the trade is reported quiet, there seems to be enough enthusiasm among our country people to keep business moving, even if the margins are small, and all such grit and determination to keep business going is developing a better feeling as regards dull times.

The band boys are making arrangements for an excursion to Mackinaw and the straits in the near future.

This seems to be a favorite field for sewing machine agents; they are welcome though, since one of them succeeded in extricating a woman from the depths of South Arm last week, probably saving her life, and adding to the comfort of others.

Mr. Buttars, administrator of the estate of James Otis, deceased, removed his effects from Ironton one day last week.

The cases of diphtheria mentioned last week in district No. 4, have all yielded to the successful treatment of Dr. Lewis.

Our school officers made a demand on the town treasurer for money that belonged to our district. He informed them that he had used it for other purposes, by order of town board.

At a school meeting held in district No. 4, the officers were instructed to collect the money due that district from the township treasurer. Some people want all that belong to them.

A Sample of Protection.

Mr. Sherwood Dixon, of Dixon, Ill., at a democratic meeting at Amboy in the same state a few days ago, showed up one of the methods of robbery peculiar to the protective system as follows:

We have in our city of Dixon one of these protected "American industries." It is no "infant," for it has existed there for nearly or quite twenty years. With the exception of a brief period about the year 1872, it has been mainly to day a special object of protection. Continuously since 1861, with the exception of the period I have named, the laws enacted by the republican party have imposed a protective duty upon imported goods of the class manufactured by this establishment (bagging for cotton and other manufactures). Here we have an industry which according to the theory of the protectionist is to furnish employment to the laborers, consume the waste product of the farmer's field, the flax straw, and advance the interests of our community. Yet for nearly or quite a year past it has stood idle. The building is there the machinery is in place, the water power to propel it exists, yet the hum of the wheels has ceased, and the operatives are forced to find employment elsewhere. And I am informed that, while not a yard of bagging has been produced or marketed, while the mill has remained silent and they who were acenstomed to find employment there have been idle or driven to other occupations, the proprietors have received dividends on what the mill might have produced, and I am told that those dividends amount to $9,000 for the period during which no work has been done there.

The proprietors of the various bagging factories in the country have entered into a combination or pool for the purpose of controlling the quantity of bagging to be manufactured, and by thus limiting it to maintain its price at such a figure as will enable those mills which are run not only to earn a reasonable profit, but also to pay the mill at Dixon (and doubtless others) for remaining idle. Now I say, and I believe that every thoughtful man will concur with me, that any system of legislation which enables idle capital to earn dividends while the consequently enforced idle labor must starve or consume the savings of former industry, is wrong.

"Not Proven."

Charges of immorality may be made and proven against the mass of mankind. Strange as it may seem there is no use in shutting our eyes to the fact that the measure of immorality is largely a question of location. This is just as certainly true as that there are degrees of immorality. In certain communities dancing and card playing for amusement are considered immoral. Judged by the English standard the French are lax in their morals. The Michigan standard is higher than the California standard; the Boston standard higher than Chicago, and, if reports may be believed, the Detroit standard is a little above the Buffalo standard. The Evening Journal has distinctly announced editorially that it has nothing, and will have nothing, to do with the general charges of immorality made against Grover Cleveland. We simply asked that the charges of inhumanity and the cruel and brutal treatment of a woman be investigated. The Evening Journal has personally conducted a thorough investigation of the matter at Buffalo, and every honest journalist in that city will concede as several have stated already, that the investigation has been unbiased and impartial. It may be somewhat early in the case to render a verdict, but with all the light which can be at present thrown upon the market there is but one conclusion in our mind. The old Scotch verdict of "Not Proven" will be rendered. And in so far as the charges of cruelty, brutality and inhumanity are concerned, unless Maria Halpin opens her mouth and speaks, the verdict of "Not Proven" must stand.—Evening Journal.

Those papers the loudest in advocating the protection of American labor from the "pauper labor of Europe" somehow forget to practice what they preach. The New York Tribune, the Philadelphia Press, and the Indianapolis Journal are all advocates of the protection theory, and cry for a tariff that will give American workmen high wages; yet, strange to say, they practice just the opposite. They denounce the efforts of their own workmen to raise wages, as interfering with the rights of American citizens to employ anyone they wish, and at as low wages as they can get them to work for, and then in effect say to their employes: "While we consider it wrong for you to try and get high wages while in our employ, it is perfectly proper to prevent you spending your money where you can buy the cheapest." They have howled for protection to American labor so long that perhaps some of them actually believe a tariff is a benefit to the laborer; just as the mill owners of Oswsh will tell you, with all the simplicity of children, that their men are better fed, better clothed and better housed than any other help in the United States, though your own eyes and ears and nose tell you just the opposite. But as to the manufacturers, who are all the time importing the cheapest help they can find, and are all the time reducing the average pay of those they employ, does anyone for an instant suppose they are advocates of a protective tariff for the sake of their workmen? They may be able to befuddle the average laborer into believing that the tariff helps to sustain his wages, but they are not so simple minded as to deceive themselves. The lumber and salt and agricultural iron manufacturers want a tariff for no other reason than the simple one that it puts money into their pockets. Their goods are protected from competition with foreign countries but they can search the whole world over for the cheapest labor to be found.

Everybody knows that the tax on lumber has not been reduced—it remains at the same figure as for many years, $2 per thousand feet—but the wages of the men working in lumber camps and saw mills are undergoing reductions all over the state. How does this happen, if the republican doctrine, that a "high tariff means high wages," is true?

Wages are determined by supply and demand. There is no tariff "protection to American labor." The so-called pauper laborers of Europe are free to come here whenever and in such numbers as they please, and they are even contracted to come here by the beneficiaries of protective taxation because they will work cheaper than will American laborers. Yet republicans clamin that "protection" protects labor!

In twenty ports in England and Ireland an aggregate of 7,748 seamen signed the total abstinence pledge last year. This is an effective plan for lessening the dangers of the sea.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., presiding at the annual meeting of the united kingdom band of hope union, said there were now about 3,000,000 abstainers in the united kingdom, most of whom had become so through the influence of bands of hope. The union reports 13,000 bands of hope, a membership of 1,824,377 and 55,000 active honorary workers.

Oh! for one generation of clean and unpolluted men! Men whose veins are not fed with fire; men fit to be the companions of pure women; men who do not stumble upon the rock of apoplexy at mid age, nor go staggering down into a drunkard's grave; but who can sit and look upon the faces of their grandchildren with eyes undimmed and hearts unshrunk and cool. Such a generation as this is possible in America, and to produce such a revolution, the persistent, consecutions work of temperance reformers is entirely competent.

It is often said that prohibition of the liquor traffic will entail great loss upon the various business interests of a community. Saturday, The following practical results of the great temperance revival in Medina, N. Y., are by no means exceptional, and prove total abstinence a profitable investment: Men on every side are telling of old debts paid up and of safes to men who two months ago would not have dreamed of purchasing such articles. A butcher said, "I have ordered an extra lot of cattle and must order more. I cannot keep up with the demand since this temperance work began." A dry goods merchant told of a woman coming in to pay a debt of $14 and saying she had just paid a grocery bill of $60, all because her husband had signed the pledge. A coal dealer told of a man paying a bill and saying he was ashamed that it had run so long, but he had signed the pledge but a little while before and "this was beer and whisky money."

GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Notes and News.

Kent county nominates a union ticket for county officers.

Nearly all the German newspapers in the northwest have come out for Cleveland and Hendricks.

The Chicago Herald says two million young men will cast their first vote for president this fall, and advises that it will be well to look after them. Many of them will vote as their father's did, while others will try to vote intelligently on the merits of the issue.

The Chicago Herald produces figures to show that every man, woman, and child in the United States pays $2 cents a year tariff tax on sugar, putting $44,000,000 into the United States treasury, in order to benefit a few planters to the amount of $8,000,000. Could not this tax be slightly reduced while there is such a surplus in the treasury?

The New York Tribune tries to bolster up Blaine's prospects by printing a speech made by Henry Ward Beecher explicitly of the candidate; but in a foot note in small type gives the whole thing away by saying it was delivered in favor of Garfield, and as Blaine and Garfield were friends, Blaine's name was substituted. Such trickery will not win Beecher will not support Blaine.

Innocent or not, Mr. Blaine has not escaped the gossiping tongue of the scandal-mongers, and evidence which would loose his supporters blush with shame have been circulated about him. Rancor to enemy or critor of his has completed Blaine as legitimate weapons of warfare, and they will be sorely tried and irritated beyond endurance by their opponents before they retaliate in kind. But when they do, we make bold to say that the assailants of Mr. Cleveland will empty beauty when they ever provoked invasion and defenders into so ignominious and detestable, but necessary, a conflict. Detroit Free Press.

The president of the Workingmen's assembly in New York has published a recent concise statement of Gov. Cleveland's course in regard to bills before the last session of the New York legislature, the passage of which was asked by the trades organizations. The governor approved five out of six of these bills. As a consequence Cleveland is becoming a prime favorite among New York workingmen.—N. Y. Democrat.

Mr. Hinebaugh left at this office last Friday two handsome specimen of beets, grown in his garden, the thrifty tops of which made a mess of greens for a family of seven, and the beets sliced made nearly three quarts of pickles. Northern Michigan isn't so bad a place to live in.

The entertainment given by the ladies' band at the opera house last Saturday evening, was well patronized and gave general satisfaction. Miss Jessie Smith did some fine work on the cornet, and with her vocal solos, indicates rare musical talent. Miss Lura Barden, elocutionist, gave several interesting exercises. Miss Minnie Whitney's violin exercises show her to be well advanced in the control of that instrument.

Rosenthal & Son, of Petoskey, have purchased B. See's stock of dry goods, etc., and will fill the store with a complete stock of clothing, dry goods, cloaks, gents' furnishings, and carpets, and by the time they will bring trads from all the surrounding country. Rosenthal has the credit of drawing people to Petoskey by advertising low prices, who never fail to go for any other purpose. We believe he can do as much for Charlevoix, and we will all be gainers by his enterprise.

We have been berated for giving encouragement to an enterprise in competition with that of our own townsmen, though it gives much better accomodation than the old arrangement. Without such encouragement the JOURNAL would not have been established. Without such encouragement there would be no great competition in business, and but a small part of the present inducement to improvement. Shall we go back to the old order of things,—one of a kind,—or continue for many as many new faces to Charlevoix as possible?

The Congregational Bazaar.

The ladies of the Congregational church and society wish to announce that they will hold a bazaar in Bartholomew's opera house on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week, the proceeds to go towards the completion of the church building of the society.

In soliciting the patronage of the public a second time in this way, their only excuse is the urgency of their cause. Those who have had experience in building churches realize how hard it is to raise the necessary funds and will no doubt be glad to show their appreciation of the efforts of these ladies to forward the enterprise. For nearly a year they have been working faithfully to prepare the articles they now offer for sale, often allowing their home duties to suffer to do this. They have endeavored to present a large variety of useful and ornamental articles for home furnishing. Most people will doubtless find it cheaper to purchase of them than to take the time and trouble to make the things themselves. Below is appended a partial list of the articles to be offered:

Tidies of all descriptions, table scarfs, sofa cushions, pin cushions, rag bags, stocking bags, lambrequins, slumber rolls, carriage rugs, comforts, Mother Hubbards, sun bonnets, aprons of all kinds and sizes, Chinese trinkets, hand painted paper-weights, etc.

Ice cream and lemonade will be served every afternoon and evening. There will also be a musical and literary entertainment each evening.

Remember the dates, August 13th, 14th, and 15th. All, both visitors and residents are cordially invited. Come and see the things, whether you purchase or not.

I CLIMB ? REST.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

Still must I climb, if I would rest;
The tired one's upward to the crest;
The young bird on the tree-top high,
Cradles itself within the sky.

The streams, that seem to hasten down,
Return in clouds, the hills to crown;
The plant arises from its root,
To rock aloft its flower and fruit.

I cannot to the valley stay;
The great Compeller stirs away!
The very cells that wall me round
Are ladders onto higher ground.

To work—to rest—for even a time,
I toil, but I must also climb.
What vain way ever quite my own?
A bolder level must be won.
A mightier strength to lean upon.

And heaven draws near as I ascend;
The breeze invites, the stars befriend,
All things are beckoning to the Best;
I climb to thee, my God, for rest!

THE HAUNTED JEWELS.

BY SARA B. ROBY.

"No," said old Grandma De Varney, in a voice which reminded one of a spiteful cat; "no girl shall ever own my diamonds who will not own the name I gave her—Mehitable Augusta, an aristocratic, high-sounding name it is, too."

"But, grandma, who could expect any girl nowadays to own up to such a ridiculous, old-fashioned name as that? I won't, any way—not for a thousand diamond sets."

"Nobody wants you to; nobody wants you to. You never should have them any way, if you should call yourself by as many names as Queen Victoria; it's too late in the day, my girl."

"Whoa, then, shall you give them to, grandma? Marcia?"

"Do you take me for a fool, Mehitable Augusta De Varney? If I should give them to that simple sister of yours, don't I know that it would be you that would wear them?"

"Then, I suppose, they will belong to red-headed, cross-eyed Mehitable Sisley, who sheds hypocritical tears when she hears that you are sick. . . . But what does she care whether you live or die? and I don't know as I should, if you would not even see my face."

"She cares as much as you, my dear. Your joy when I have a bad spell shows itself in your evil countenance."

"Ha, ha," laughed Gusta Sisley, "I'm not a hypocrite, anyway. I must say, I hate hypocrisy."

"There's a great many things you hate in this world, Mehitable Augusta; there's one comfort, any way, I shall leave my diamonds to Mehitable Sisley —such a hatful never crossed the sea."

As if I cared who you left them to. When you are dead I shall just take the things, and Miss Mehitable will be none the wiser."

"Mehitable Augusta De Varney," cried the old woman, her eyes flashing and raising herself among the white pillows as far as she was able, "if you dare to do such a thing, I'll ruin your whole future for you. I'll make you wish you had dealt honestly by that poor girl."

"But, grandma, you forget," said Gusta, in a low, provoking tone, "you will be dead then, and cannot help yourself."

The aged woman almost sprang from her bed in her anger, as she shrieked:

"I will help myself; I will haunt you, Mehitable Augusta! De Varney, if you dare lay hands on my diamonds after I am dead."

Gusta tossed her head and laughed in a scornful, sneering way; but before she could again speak the door opened, and Marcia, her youngest sister, entered, saying, in a shocked tone:

"What! quarreling again with grandma, Gusta, and she so very low? How can you have the heart to do so?"

"I have no heart, you know, sis; nothing but a calico gizzard," laughed Gusta.

"I don't know about that, Gusta; you have very strong affections, and may leave to suffer if there is no such matter, when you are causing grandma to suffer now."

"Don't preach, I beg," cried the heartless girl. "Here, hand me my hat; I'll get out of this as quick as possible."

After the careless and ungrateful Gusta had gone, Marcia, who was a sweet-tempered, kind-hearted girl, sat down in the vacant seat and soothed her grandmother down to something like calmness; but Marcia knew that, in spite of all her ministrations, the old lady cared nothing for her, rating her far lower in her affections than any of the impudent Gusta, whom she declared to only times a day she hated; but she went on with her duty as willingly as if she had been the best beloved of her grandmother's heart.

Everybody said that the fiery old lady and her granddaughter Gusta were exactly alike; but, if one should mention the fact to either of them, she would fly into a passion instantly and deny it with the greatest vehemence.

Old Mrs. De Varney had been a very high-spirited as well as wealthy woman, and her really fine diamonds had been the pride of her heart, and she had kept them through every reverse of fortune for the little motherless granddaughter she loved so well, and who bore her name; but, as the child grew older it was shattered, for Augusta became willful and very unkind to the poor old lady, and treated utterly to bear the name of Mehitable, which she hated. This was a great blow to the proud old lady, and she determined that if Gusta would not bear her name she should not wear her diamonds.

Marcia the old lady hated. She had no spirit, Mrs. De Varney said. But she had another granddaughter, the child of her only daughter, whom she had repudiated, because she had disgraced herself by marrying a poor man. Mrs. De Varney was then wealthy, but she was now poor, but this made no difference. She would not forgive the orphan child of her only daughter enough to see her. But although Mrs. De Varney would not look upon her face, she now intended her diamonds for her, because she said she hated Gusta, and if Marcia owned them, Gusta would be sure to wear them.

Marcia had listened to many exciting talks upon the subject, but felt little doubt but that Gusta would eventually own them; but she often said it was only right if Mehitable Sisley should get them, for grandma had done so much for Gusta and had never even seen her daughter's child. But this idea was a terrific thorn in the side of the proud and ambitious Gusta.

Marcia sat by her grandmother's side long after she was sleeping peacefully, silently sewing upon some embroidery intended for her sister's wardrobe.

Suddenly there was a terrible shudder ran over the form lying so silently among the pillows, and Marcia sprang to her feet to see the old lady in the agonies of death.

She rang a bell quickly, and gave the order:

"Send for father instantly, and tell Gusta to come quickly."

But before any one could reach her bedside, the old lady, without regaining consciousness, had passed into the land of shadows.

It was but a week after their grandmother's death, when Marcia saw Gusta one day trying the effect of her grandmother's diamonds.

"Gusta," said Marcia, "when are you going to send our cousin her diamonds?"

"They are not hers," replied Gusta, looking with wide opened eyes at Marcia. "Grandma gave them to me the very last day she lived."

Marcia looked a little incredulous, and said:

"Why, Gusta, I thought you were quarreling with grandma that day?"

"Well, I was not. She had just told me she thought she was going to die, and that I was to have the diamonds."

But she had said so many times that were to be Mehitable's that I would send them to her, if I were you."

"If you were me you would not. I am going to wear them to finish the captivation of that rich Capt. Wilyoung, who is so devoted to me."

"Gusta De Varney, you are not going to that ball, with our grandmother just dead."

"What's the diff?" said Gusta, lightly. "I am not going to lose all my chances because she is dead."

"But I think it is wrong not to call for us on that account."

"But I have met him since, and I told him it would not make the least difference."

"Gusta De Varney, you have no heart, and I was going to say—decency."

"I know it, and if it does not trouble me what business is it of other people's?"

Marcia said no more, but that night, when her sister's admirer called for her, Marcia was obliged to entertain him for a moment, as her sister was not ready.

"So you will not attend?" he asked.

"No," she replied coldly, "not so soon after grandmother's death."

She did not notice the look of approval in his face, but she wondered how he could admire one so heartless as her sister; in a moment more the servant came into the room and said in a low tone: "Your sister would like your assistance, Miss Marcia."

Marcia arose, excusing herself, and went to Gusta's side.

"Marcia, I can't fasten these tormented things, and when you touch them they feel like burning coals."

"I would not wear them with that muslin dress, they are entirely out of place."

"Nonsense, clasp them on for me quickly."

Marcia did as she was told and then brought a light Shetland shawl for her sister, who departed in a few moments for Mrs. Chase's grand entertainment.

Gusta was expecting the looks of astonishment which were cast upon her as she entered the grand parlors, for grandma's diamonds could not be equaled in the town, and had been worn but a few times in the last twenty years.

She felt very proud and complacent, and was delighted at the whispers and glances in her direction, and her triumph was at its height when, with Capt. Wilyoung on her arm, she took her place in the dance. There was a peculiar look upon his face when he said:

"I beg your pardon, Miss DeVarney, but what very uncommon ornaments yours are?"

"Very uncommon indeed," lisped Gusta in delight; "there are none in Rossville like them."

"I should think not," said he, gravely.

Gusta thanked the hand-some Captain was not as attentive as usual this evening, and she was half piqued with him when he joined a group of young ladies after the dance was finished.

"Gusta De Varney, what ails you?" asked Maude Graves, one of Gusta's particular friends. "Your face is perfectly livid, and that jewelry, I declare, Gusta, I would take great care."

"Indeed!" said Gusta, greatly displeased. "And pray, what fault have you to find with it?"

"Why they look exactly like something from a charnel house."

"Why, Maude Graves, I did not think your jealousy would lead you as far as that."

"Jealousy! Look in the glass, and see if my words are not true. Everybody is remarking upon them."

The independent Gusta went to the dressing-room with a smile on her face but one glance in the long mirror caused her blood to chill in her veins, and her face to turn, if possible, paler than before; for in the heart of each gleaming stone shone out a flamin death's head, and sevenspicuous was that every one could see the evil-looking object even across the large parlors.

"For mercy's sake, Maude," said Gusta to her friend, who had accompanied her, "help me to take off these dreadful things quick."

"Why," exclaimed her friend in astonishment, "you knew how they looked, didn't you?"

"It is some of Marcia's work" cried Gusta, perfectly infuriated at the display she had made of herself. "They must be painted on."

And then she attempted to unclasp one of the heavy bracelets, and her soft fingers touched one of the glistening bones.

"Oh!" she cried, in an agony, "the awful thing has burned my fingers to the bone!"

"The girl has gone crazy," said Maude, utterly astonished. "I will go back to the parlors."

When Maude had gone for the hostess, Gusta, with a terribly grewsome feeling, glanced around her and there, in the large mirror opposite, plainly depicted, was the face and form of her grandmother De Varney, gazing with an evil smile at her perpiexed granddaughter.

In an instant the last words her grandmother had ever said to her came into her mind, and with the cry, "My God, she is haunting me;" the unhappy girl fell in a dead faint upon the floor, and there Mrs. Chase and Maude Graves found her a few minutes later.

Restoratives were applied, and when Miss De Varney came to her senses, Capt. Wilyoung was summoned, and the frightened girl returned to her home.

Her parting with her escort was as cool as politeness would allow, upon his part.

When Marcia removed the jewels from about her sister's neck and arms, no trace of the terrible death's head was to be seen; but Gusta was sufficiently frightened, the jewels were sent to the rightful owner early the next morning; the heartless girl never wished to see them again.

Capt. Wilyoung's attentions ceased from that evening. Whether he was disgusted with the heartless girl's behavior, or afraid of first alliance, is most, certain it was that, six months later, Marcia became Mrs. Capt. Wilyoung, and was one of the most admired that there was not a particle of absolute stinginess in her nature, and she was regarded as a man of great generosity, and of conscientious views.

In response to the call for Illinois, Mr. George C. Christensen came to the platform and presented the name of ex-Gov. J. P. St. John, whom he spoke of in terms of high praise, and especially commended him to the consideration of the convention. He was a man who had seen war, who had lost on the bloody plains of the West, and possible the latter of actual, practical, constitutional prohibition. He was a man whose every instinct and energies were entirely devoted to the cause. He might not be able to maintain it legally in a judicial way, but he would give to the cause the influence of moral love and zeal for freedom which no other man now named or to be named could give more powerfully. Not only that, but he was a brother-in-law of the President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Miss Frances E. Willard seconded the nomination of St. John, whom she had known since childhood. St. John's nomination was also seconded by Mr. Dickinson, of Michigan; Mr. Banney, of Michigan; Mr. Satterlee, of Minnesota; Mrs. Bidwell, of Missouri; Mr. Hopkins, of New York; Mr. Finch, of Nebraska, and many others.

Mr. Babcock withdrew McDonald's name, and Mr. Spalding nominated St. John.

Mr. Kinsley, of Illinois, presented the name of Gen. J. A. Sewett, of Kansas. Mr. Sewett declined. He said he was no lover of St. John. The Hon. James Black, of Pennsylvania, also refused to be a candidate, and urged his friends to vote St. John.

Mr. Cleghorn, of Wisconsin, seconded the nomination of St. John, and declared that the light in the coming campaign would be between St. John and Cleveland.

After some talk, without acting on the nomination, the convention at 1:30 took a recess till 2:30.

When the convention reassembled, a large number of dispatches were read scoring the nomination of Gov. St. John, of Kansas, for President. Prominent among these was one from "Two hundred thousand Methodists are waiting to vote for St. John," from the Illinois State Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis now in session, and from other States observed the reading of these dispatches, that the Prohibitionists seem to make the proper nomination of Mr. St. John unanimous. Prof. Hopkins, of New York, submitted an amendment that the roll of States be called. Many of the delegates thought the nomination be deferred until after the adoption of the platform. The amendment was lost, and the call of the roll was ordered. All the delegations voted upon nominations for St. John, and the vote was by made the announcement giving the total vote of 676, the majority over two-thirds being necessary to a choice. Cheers were next in order, and several moments elapsed before the chairman could secure silence sufficient to announce the name of Rev. John A. Blanchard, of Illinois, as the next candidate for Vice President.

Mr. Blanchard, of Illinois, addressed the convention, but in the course of his remarks gave offense to some of the Western delegates, and left the platform amid the hisses of the audience.

At the evening session the permanent organization was announced, with Hon. Samuel Dickey, of Michigan, as President, a great many Vice Presidents, and Mrs. Wm. Hartley, of Ohio, as Secretary. The selections of the committees were announced in.

The list of States was called for the nomination of one member from each, of a committee on finance, and two members of the National Executive Committee.

Various propositions were submitted and referred to the committee on Resolutions. Among them was one to make the basis of representation at the next National Prohibition Convention for each Congressional District and four for each State; and another to change the party's name.

The convention at 10 o'clock adjourned till 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Second Day.

The convention was called to order at 9:20 by the chairman, Mr. Dickey, of Michigan, and the day were opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Hays, of New York.

In electing the temporary organization, William Daniel, of Maryland, was elected Chairman, and Mrs. Woolbridge, of Ohio, and Charles S. Cotter, of Washington, as secretaries. Mr. Daniel spoke of the progress the cause of temperance had made in Maryland. He thought that if the Christian voters of the country were united, they could put St. John or some other good man in the White House.

After the appointment of a Committee on Credentials, the convention adjourned until the afternoon.

The 1:30 session was opened with a felicitous remembrance, the entire convention joined, singing in the singing of "John Brown," and, after prayer, "Down Him Lord of All." The Secretary reported the following State representation:

Delaware, 2; California, six; Connecticut, 12; Illinois, 46; Maine, 8; Kansas, 17; Kentucky, 26; Michigan, 36; Nebraska, 11; Massachusetts, 24; New Jersey, 16; Maryland, 16; New York, 76; Pennsylvania, 52; Rhode Island, 4; Pennsylvania, 36; Wisconsin, 35; total, 446.

Telegrams were received from all parts of the country encouraging the work of the convention.

W. C. A. Blanchard, of Illinois, addressed the convention, but in the course of his remarks gave offense to some of the Western delegates, and left the platform amid the hisses of the audience. Many conferences on the floor before he had concluded.

At 2:30 a call of the States was ordered for the presentation of candidates for the Vice Presidency. When California was reached Mr. Haboush, of California, arose and placed in nomination Dr. McDonald, of California. The nomination was received with a storm of applause that lasted for some minutes. Cheers for the nominee and for California, and when the excitement had subsided Mr. Haboush said that there was not a particle of alcoholic stimulants in the composition of the beverage known as a man of great generosity, and of conscientious views.

In response to the call for Illinois, Mr. George C. Christensen came to the platform and presented the name of ex-Gov. J. P. Cheers were next in order, and several moments elapsed before the chairman could secure silence sufficient to announce the name of Rev. John A. Blanchard, of Illinois, as the next candidate for Vice Presidency.

The committee on resolutions reported the following platform, which is as follows:

1. The Prohibition Home Protection party, in national convention assembled, acknowledge Almighty God as the rightful sovereign of all men, and from whom the just powers of government are derived. We believe human governments should conform, and that peace, prosperity, and happiness only can come in the people when the laws of the National and State governments are in accord with the divine will.

2. That the importation, manufacture, supply, and sale of alcoholic beverages, created and maintained by the force of national and State governments, during the entire history of such laws, in every State known as the prevailing source of intemperance, with resulting crime and pauperism, making large demands upon public and private charity, imposing large and unjust taxation and public burdens, and peril and misery, for instituting upon thrift, industry, commerce, business, and commerce; enslaving the public peace; and the desecration of the Sabbath; debasing the public morals; corrupting the ballot, and the legislature, imperiling lives, imbruting the youth, and diminishing the productive industry, meaning existing to be neglected and despised; nullifying the teachings of Christianity, and the name of Christ, and the standards and guides of our fathers from whom they obtained the founding and government of, our widely extended country, and in fact, annulling the perpetuity of our civil and religious liberty, as baleful fruits, by which we know that these laws are alike contrary to God's laws and contravene our happiness and we call upon our fellow-citizens to aid in the repeal of these laws and the legal suppression of this baleful home traffic.

3. The fact that during the twenty-four years in which the Republican party has controlled the General Government, and that of many of these States, no effort has been made to change the policy. Territories have been created from the national domain, and governments for them established, and States from them admitted to the Union, in neither of which has this traffic been forbidden, or the people of these Territories or States been permitted to prohibit. That there are now over 300,000 distilleries, breweries, and retail dealers in these drink infamies and claiming the authority of government for the creation thereof, we deem the time to be ripe and the necessity great, the people, together with the best, have turned a deaf ear to remonstrance and petition for the correct on of the liquor government, is conclusive that in the party of boasted intelligence, and of the universal suffrage and universal education, the power of combinations of wealth, and the possibilities of governmental corruption, that party is the bane and not the safeguard of liberty. We believe that the Republican party, in this regard, is derelict to duty, and is not worthy to be entrusted with the power of government, and we call upon all patriots and all parties to remember this fact at the ballot-box.

4. That the Democratic party has also been derelict to duty, and is not worthy to be entrusted with power, in that, during the quarter of a century in which, with but little exception, it has had the control of the National House of Representatives, it has never attempted the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution, nor the enactment of a prohibitory law for the District of Columbia, nor for the Territories, although the Democratic party has always been the party of strict construction, and has always claimed that the Federal Government has no power to enact and enforce a prohibitory law, except such as is clearly granted by the Constitution, and although the Democratic party has always been the party of jealousy of the powers of the General Government, and of the reserved rights of the States, yet when the Republican party, in the exercise of its constitutional powers, submitted the proposition to the people to prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, the Democratic party, as a party, came to the front as the open defender of the liquor traffic, threw the whole force of the party against the proposition, and declared in favor of high license, low license, and no license, as if the question of high or low license was the question submitted, and not prohibition, and thereby proved recreant to the trust reposed in it by the people, and unworthy to be trusted with power.

5. That we believe in the equality of the sexes, and that the right of women to vote for the candidates for whom they would prove a powerful auxiliary in the extermination of the drink traffic, and we favor the immediate submission to the people of the question of the right of women to vote at the next election, and we declare it to be the duty of the Republican and Democratic parties to do likewise.

6. That we believe that the only way to secure the removal of the liquor traffic is by the action of the people at the ballot-box, and we favor the removal of the question from all partisan politics.

7. That we favor the immediate withdrawal from connection with and control of the liquor traffic of the General Government in the States and Territories and the withdrawal of all protection by the people of the Federal Government, instead of opposition.

8. That we favor the immediate withdrawal from connection with and control of the liquor traffic of the General Government in the States and Territories and the withdrawal of all protection by the people of the Federal Government, instead of opposition.

9. That we favor the immediate withdrawal from connection with and control of the liquor traffic of the General Government in the States and Territories and the withdrawal of all protection by the people of the Federal Government, instead of opposition.

10. That we favor the immediate withdrawal from connection with and control of the liquor traffic of the General Government in the States and Territories and the withdrawal of all protection by the people of the Federal Government, instead of opposition.

11. That Congress should exercise its power, and prohibit the importation and sale of intoxicating beverages in the States and Territories where such sale is prohibited by law, and in all places over which the General Government has exclusive jurisdiction.

12. That hereafter no State shall be admitted into the Union until its constitution prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages.

We earnestly call the attention of the people, irrespective of party, to this platform, and ask an investigation of the principles and measures we have advocated for the suppression of the liquor traffic, which we believe to be the greatest peril that now threatens the perpetuity of our free institutions, and we most respectfully and earnestly solicit for the platform and candidates of the Prohibition party the support of all who believe that the existing complication of the liquor traffic with the various political parties of the country is the great hindrance to the settlement of the temperance question, and that the only practical method of settlement is the withdrawal from connection with and control of the liquor traffic by the political parties, and the concentration of the temperance forces of the country in a party pledged to the suppression of the traffic by the people of the Federal Government, instead of opposition.

The committee on resolutions reported the following resolutions, to which the time for their literary revision, since the convention would not be able to report to-day, and the party be fixed as the Prohibition party:

Miss Wittard spoke in favor of the name of the Prohibition party, and Mrs. Miner's motion, and the resolutions were referred to the committee.

The convention then took a recess till 8 o'clock, regarding the raising of funds for the campaign. Mrs. Lathrop, of Illinois, was elected to the Vice Presidency.

The evening session was opened by prayer by Rev. Dr. Hays, of New York, and a number of Christian gentlemen and ladies addressed the meeting—the father of the late Frances Willard, Mrs. Minnie Mosher Jones, and others. It was announced the same evening that as they had John F. Hume, of Iowa, was elected to be Treasurer.

Mr. Babcock, of California, seconded the nomination, being assured that Mr. Hume was a Maryland for prohibitionist.

After a rambling discussion of the platform and a protracted session of the committee on Daniel, the States were called for the nominations chosen the candidates for President.

Mr. Daniel briefly referred to the fact that some further information had been received since the adjournment of the convention.

ON THE BARACOA RIVER.

Bird's-eye View of the Romantic and Industrial Life of Cuba.

It was one sunny afternoon in February we started, three of us, for a day of discovery up one of the rivers which drain the beautiful Bay of Cuba.

Our little vessel in our dory, the small boat we had, and rowed ourselves gun-boat and through a fleet of fruit-lighters to the wharf, the side of which the river enters the harbor. As we went up by the sides of the two guards, who are always there, came to the side and asked us our boat to see that we had nothing ashore, but being satisfied of our peaceable intentions, allowed back to a crowd of boys, who we passed on.

Just at the first the houses of the fruit-shipping firms, where we see piles of fruit, as quickly as it grows to the coal in the sheds, and the vast battery of lack doors which open out to the river. Here we see the great cranes to study the details of the Cubans, and in some cases the sights that we saw were amusing. One thing that we noticed struck us as being rather odd, was that all the ladies smoked, and that little cigarettes which are the invention of our American girls have been taken to by the Cuban ladies. They are said, however, on a certain occasion, in which one soul was required for another, to have for the first time sacrificed a victim, and the whole of the victim was then consumed by fire. But afterward, when the victim was burned, a portion of the flesh fell on the earth, which was taken by the priest, who, in so doing, having burned his fingers, involuntarily moved them to his mouth, as a remedy for the pain which the burning produced. Having thus tasted of the roasted flesh, he also desired to eat eternally of it, and could not refrain from giving some of it to his wife. Pygmalion, becoming acquainted with this circumstance, ordered both the priest and his wife to be buried headlong from a steep rock, and gave the priesthood to another person, who, not long afterward partook of the same sacrifice and eating the flesh of the victim, fell into the same calamities as his predecessors. We found, however, proceeding still further, and men using the same kind of sacrifice, and through yielding to a desire, not abstaining from, but proceeding on flesh, the dread was no longer punished."

Such a story is related in Dampier's account which was published in 1828, and we learn from Barry Cornhill's "Memoir" of Lamb that the "Essays of Elia" among which is the "Dissertation on Roast Pig"), appeared in the London Magazine between the month of August, 1820, and November, 1821. If some, therefore, not unfair to conclude that the above coincidence was in fact an adaptation—if plagiarism is too grave a word to apply to it.

Uncle Billy's Superstition About Broom.

"If you put a broom in de corner always let de broom part be on de floor, an' de handle stickin up, else you don't had luck, gwine come to dat house des as sho' as you do it; 'deed it will."

This was a queer statement, in the opinion of the market men, and the men being ridiculed. Uncle Billy appealed to a colored man whose name is Dick, whereupon Dick enthusiastically indorsed his old partner by declaring:

"Ole Billy is talkin' de right sort o' talk, gemmen. Be an telltale de truf, of ribber she was spoke. Whatever you do, don't never be for to put a broom up de wrong way, an' let her stay dat way obo night.

Dick further strengthened his testimony on the broom question by saying:

"I'd jes think dis ain't do truf, dean let some make gave, an you sell a broom what bin settin up de wrong way up all night, fores, of you does, you gwine ter jail, sho'."

"Go to jail!" some one exclaimed.

"Yasser, go ter jail! Dats what I said, an I knows what I'se sayin', kase I bin dun dat. Dat broom wuz sole by de wid a long-limed broom, an' dese geoshes fore de mo' night I was in de jail-house. Yasser, I sho' was hurt for have no make a pass at you wid a wise broom, kaze dat's no harm."

Twenty-five Per Cent. Stronger than Any Other Butter Color.

HUNTINGTON, VT., May 8, 1885.

I hereby certify that I have examined the Butter Color prepared by Wells, Richardson & Co., and that the same is free from alkali or any other substance injurious to health; that I have compared it with some of the best of the other Butter Colors in the market and find it to be more than twenty-five per cent. stronger in color than the best of the others.

I am satisfied that it is not liable to become rancid, or in any way to injure the butter. I have examined it after two months' free exposure to the air in a place liable to sudden changes of temperature, and found no trace of rancidity, while other kinds similarly exposed became rancid.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FOR THE CURE OF
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT Cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in fitful and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of Dr. Bull's Smith's TONIC SYRUP, BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and Scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

DR. JOHN BULL'S VEGETABLE WORM DESTROYER is prepared in the form of candy drops, attractive to the sight and pleasant to the taste.

THE EAST.

THE Thetis, Alert, and Bear arrived at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, on the 22d inst., with Dr. Kane. Greely was joined by his wife and children, from California, and his mother and brother, from Massachusetts. Secretary Chandler and Gen. Hazen extended their heartiest congratulations.

THE Wear anchor Company's furniture factory, Howard's Hotel, a planing-mill, lumber yard, and four saloons at Philadelphia were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $100,000. The Delaware and Hudson and Pittsburg Dock Company's freight houses at Flatbush, L. I., with their contents, two warehouses, and a number of loaded freight cars were swept away by fire. By the burning of a building at New York a child perished in the flames, and four persons were fatally burned. The financial loss is $250,000. Jay-Eye-See trotted a mile at Providence in 2.10, beating the record of Maud S.

THE big hotels in the fashionable resorts of the East are not as extensively patronized this year as during last and previous seasons. People do not appear to have so much money to spend, and are willing to put up with boarding-house accommodations in order to economize. Nearly half the buildings in Afton, N. Y., were swept away by fire, the loss being $75,000.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad depot, ferry-houses, sheds, and dress at Jersey City, together with the piers, upon which were a number of loaded freight cars, were swept away by fire. A gas explosion caused the fire, the loss from which amounts to about $200,000. Lord Greely and his surviving companions were given a brilliant reception at Portsmouth, N. H. Nearly half the people of the State turned out to welcome them. As soon as they had disembarked a procession was formed, and they were escorted through the city amid the cheers of the assembled multitude. They were formally welcomed by Secretary Chandler, the Governor of New Hampshire, and the Mayor of Portsmouth.

THE dyestuffs firm of Gifford, Sherman & Innes, of New York and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has been forced to the wall for lack of capital commensurate with its extensive business. The corner-stone of the Bartholdi statue, on Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor, was laid last week.

OWING to an old feud, the widow of Murray fatally shot Thomas Lavery at Woonsocket, R. I., and then sent a bullet into his own brain.

THE WEST.

TONS of dead fish, chiefly perch, are daily taken from Fourth Lake, near Madison, Wis., and buried in the sandbanks outside the city. The cause of the mortality can not be learned.

"SHADOWS of a Great City" is in the fourth week of a successful run at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. It will be followed next week by "The Pavements of Paris," from the French of Adolph Belot, said to be a play of unusual depth and power.

EDGAR L. WAKEMAN, of Chicago, has organized a company with a paid-up capital of $500,000 to continue the publication of his sterling literary work, the Sunset Cox. At a reception tendered by the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce to Robert Harris, he stated that the Northern Pacific intended within three years to complete its branches. Maud S. trotted a mile at Cleveland without a skip in 2.09½. She was accompanied by a running horse. The grain crop of Colorado—2,000,000 bushels—is 5 per cent greater than any previous yield.

ROBIN A. CARPENTER, who is charged with the murder of his servant girl, Zora Burns, at Lincoln, Ill., and acquitted of the charge some months ago, contemplates bringing an action for damages against the members of the committee of citizens at Lincoln who had him arrested with a view to resolutions warning him to leave that city. Mr. Carpenter was in Chicago the other day consulting lawyers, so says the Chicago Tribune.

ANTHONY HAYES, of Clinton, Iowa, refused a liquor-seller who had been fined and committed by Justice of the Peace. The effect of this decision is to take all liquor cases to the district court for trial on indictments by juries. . . Fred Sharon, son of ex-Senator Sharon, was married at San Francisco to Mrs. Louise Breckenridge, the divorced wife of the Hon. O. F. Breckenridge, and daughter of Mr. Lloyd Tevis, President of the Wells-Fargo Express Company.

THE Texas fever is spreading among the cattle in Southern Kansas. Gov. Glick intends to issue a proclamation prohibiting the importation of all Texas cattle into the State. He will permit them to pass through that State only by rail under strict precautions. The Governor of Montana has issued a proclamation quarantining Texas cattle from northern ranges. In a report to Gov. Hamilton on the Texas fever, Dr. Pearce, Veterinary Surgeon of Illinois, recommends that most of the Southern States, with Missouri, Kansas, and Indian Territory, be proclaimed as infected and rail and canal companies be prohibited from bringing cattle from these places into Illinois until Nov. 1. Dr. Pearce certify that the shipments are healthy and have been outside the affected districts for sixty days. A fire at San Francisco stopped the establishment of Schmidt & Co., the principal refining firm of the Pacific coast. The shop of Tatum & Bowen was also destroyed. The total loss is about $270,000.

GOVE. PENNOYER, who claimed to be an old pioneer, was lunged for murder at Rose City, Idaho. Upon the gallows he called on the pioneers in the district to avenge his death.

AT a meeting of the Central Dakota Press Association, at Huron, resolutions were adopted for a division of the Territory and the admission of South Dakota as a State under the Sioux Falls constitution. A TOPEKA dispatch reports that "Gen. Hatch has encamped with six cavalry companies at a point twenty-five miles southeast of Caldwell, Kan., and proposes to clear Oklahoma of two thousand invaders."

THE SOUTH.

MRS. FRANCES STODDARD, a widow, aged 70, who died a few days ago near Monroe, N. C., confessed that she had murdered her husband by pouring molten lead into his ear thirty years ago. She refused to say what was the motive of the crime.

A DISPATCH from Lexington, Ky., says: Reports from along the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad give evidence of a bitter fight over the election of Appellate Judge from the First District of Kentucky. In an altercation at Enterprise, Robert Griffy shot and killed two men, and then died from the effects of a shot from the pistol of one of his victims, who died before he was killed himself, or from the pistol of some unknown person. At Morehead a fight took place near the polls between William Trumbo and H. G. Price, and, after exchanging shots the fight became general. The first man to drop was Solomon Bradley, killed by a bullet above the ear, and the second death was that of Add Sizemore, of Gates Station, shot by Constable Allen Sutton and John Martin and John Day followed. Sutton is said to have killed Sizemore, but was shooting at someone else in the crowd. Many others were injured. At Somerset, James Jay, 60 years old, and Bunt Dalton, aged 50, met at the election and engaged an old quarrel, in the course of which Dalton was shot and killed. At an election booth in this city, G. W. Gores, a Republican, shot George Stoddard, a Republican, killing him instantly, and Dick Murphy disemboweled Jack Cleary with a knife.

ACCORDING to the reports of the Lynchburg (Va.) Tobacco Association the sales of leaf tobacco thus far this season have aggregated 13,000,000 pounds, 2,000,000 pounds less than the sales for the corresponding period of last year. The sales are now increasing and the manufacturers report a better demand.

A FORT WORTH (Texas) dispatch says: It is a well-known fact at El Paso and points west of there that the yellow fever is raging at Nogales, Arizona. Nogales lies ninety-three miles southwest of Benson and 252 miles from El Paso. The Texas authorities are maintaining a rigid quarantine along the Gulf line and the border line near the mouth of the Rio Grande, but are practically leaving the western boundary line unprotected by any restrictive measures.

A SOUTHERN dispatch states that "5,000 veterans of the Union and Confederate armies are encamped at Dallas, Texas. A special train was sent to meet President Davis, who entertained himself with a lengthy letter, his wife accompanying it with a statement that the physician in charge of Jefferson Davis, Jr., had prevented him from meeting his former comrades. Mr. Davis complains that the veterans of the army of Mexico have been the subjects of special discrimination."

EMMA J. HARRINGTON secured a divorce at Baltimore from Robert Fearing, whom she married in Castine, Me., in 1870. Fearing claimed in a letter from Europe that Southern friends continued a picture of a mulatto boy, whom he ingratuitously said was his child. Mrs. Fearing began an investigation, discovered that her husband's relatives were full-blooded negroes, and on the laws of Maine and Maryland annulled the marriages between Africans and Caucasians, was granted a decree.

POLITICAL.

SENATOR MAHONE has scanned the disguised from the cold-nose of Washington Col. W. E. Sims, with whom he had a bitter quarrel in the Republican National Convention, because the latter voted for Blaine.

IT is probable that the Democrats and Anti-Prohibition Republicans of Kansas will unite in the nomination of a fusion ticket for State officers and Supreme Court Judges. The Democratic convention will be held at Topeka the 28th inst., and the Anti-Prohibition Republicans will meet in the same place the same day.

MONROE (Ala.) telegram: "The State and county elections of Alabama passed quietly, so far as yet reported. There being but one State ticket, that headed by Gov. E. A. O'Neil, the result can be anticipated. In several counties there were independent candidates for county offices, who have been defeated, except in Mobile, where the Independents obtained, by the help of the colored voters, a large majority over the regular Democracy."

PORTSMOUTH (N. H.) dispatch: Galvin (Rep.), Democrat, was chosen Mayor over W. H. Sise, Republican, to-day, by a vote of 1,063 to 934, the smallest Republican vote ever cast in the city.

The Democrats have elected their ticket in Mobile, where the Independents obtained, by the help of the colored voters, a large majority over the regular Democracy.

PORTSMOUTH (N. H.) dispatch: Galvin (Rep.), Democrat, was chosen Mayor over W. H. Sise, Republican, to-day, by a vote of 1,063 to 934, the smallest Republican vote ever cast in the city.

The Democrats elected their ticket in Mobile, where the Independents obtained a majority of the city government, securing thirteen out of the fourteen County Board, and six out of the seven Aldermen. It is understood that Mr. Blaine will be entertained at a grand banquet by prominent citizens of Boston next month.

THE Illinois Greenbackers have issued a call for a State Convention at Bloomington on the 27th of August. A Berlin dispatch says the Massachusetts Greenbackers of that State will hold a convention for the nomination of State officers Sept. 4. The State Committee feel confident that Butler will accept the Presidential nomination tendered him by their party.

GEN. BUTLER has written the following letter:

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 6.

To the Hon. Chas. A. Dana, editor New York Sun, New York City:

DEAR SIR: As a means of reaching more quickly than I can on in any other way I write the note for such use as you may choose to make of it, to say that I consent to stand by the nominations of the Greenback-Labor and Anti-Monopolists, and hope everybody will vote for me who think that it is the best thing to do. I will give the reasons on my action which are controlling to the public as soon as I can have the benefit of Mr Cleveland's letter of acceptance, so that, when I answer with it I may do him no injustice. Very truly your friend and servant,

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

Gov. Cleveland visited Mr. Tilden at Graystone on the 6th inst., and had a talk with him about the result of the election. Gov. Cleveland left for the Adirondack Mountains on the following day. Mr. Blaine has temporarily left Bar Harbor, the business men of Portland, Me., on the 6th inst.

GENERAL.

MR. THEODORE H. GROWNEY, a civil engineer of San Francisco, who has been employed on the Panama Canal, in an interview published in the San Francisco Chronicle, gives it as his opinion that the work will not be completed under the present management. The expense will exceed the estimates eight times. Extravagance and fraud have characterized the conduct of the work so far, the contractors having in many instances made double charges of what they have paid for goods. When gold was discovered at Limgpoh bar Laicy went there, worked with a rocker like a man, and washed out hundreds of dollars' worth of gold, all of which she gave to Pomeroy. With it he built a fine schooner and enlarged his business. The faithful Laicy working always at his side and bidding. At last, after eight or ten years, he grew weary of her and of the country, and made up his mind to go to California. But he had not the heart to tell Laicy he meant to leave her. No pilot who told me this story was at that time captain of a schooner on the river. Pomeroy came to him one day and asked him to move Laicy and her effects down to Columbus. He said he told her she must go and live with her relatives while he went to California and looked about, and then he would send for her.

The poor creature, who had no idea of treachery, came on board quietly and willingly, and he set her off at Columbus. This was in the early spring. Week after week she watched for the boats whenever his schooner stopped there. Laicy was on the shore asking if he had heard from Pomeroy. After a long time he said, he couldn't bear to tell her. At last he did; but she would not believe him. Winter came on. She got a few boards together and built herself a sort of a hut, near a house where she lived on occasional odd jobs, who finally took compassion on her, and to save her from freezing, let her come into his shanty to sleep. She was a mysterious old man, it reckon, with a morbid aversion to women, and at the outset it was a great struggle for him to let even an Indian woman cross his threshold. But, little by little, Laicy won her way; first she washed the dishes, then she would timidly help at the cooking. Faithful, patient, unpresuming, at last she grew to be really the old man's housekeeper as well as servant. He lost his health and became blind. Laicy took care of him until he died, and followed him to the grave, his only mourner, the only living being in the country with whom he had any tie. He left her little house and a few hundred dollars—all he had—and there she is still, alone, making out to live by doing whatever work she can find in the neighborhood. Every old woman in the neighborhood respects her. She is known as "Laicy" for miles down the river. "I did my best to hire her to come and keep house for me," said the pilot, "I'd have given the grip. Laicy would have been worth a dozen Hollanders, $8,636; Scotch, 176,136; Welsh, 48,877; Russians, 33,722; Swedes, 16,- and Swiss, 88,621. These are not included through the Southern States for being in the former slave States. Smith, the census chief, says the most numerous element in the foreign-born population. If the census were taken when Gen. Grant was President, on the river he would know."—Oregon letter.

Thoughts Henry D. Thureau Hat.

The profane never hear music; the holy never hear it. It is only the pure in divine breath an like. When it is heard, then is a sabbath. It is omnipotent. All things obey it as they obey virtue.

When to-day I saw the "great ball" rolled majestically along, it seemed a shame that man could not move like it. All dignity and grandeur has something of the Divine in it. Multitudinousness of the sphere. It is the secret of the elephant and the ox, and grace in action and in art. The line of beauty is a curve.

We know men by their eyes. You might say that the eye was always original and unlike a face. It is the confirm of the individual and not the family; in twins still different. All a person's power is in his eye. And a man's pression he cannot alter more than he can alter his character.

The eye of love wants a companion for he is unit to be a companion even of himself. We inspire friendship in men's eyes, we are contracted friendship with the gods.

The wood thrush has echoes from the evening strains from the thickest of the pines. I admire the moderation of this matter. There is nothing tumultuous in his song. There is as great an interval between the consummation sexed by the wood thrush as between Thomsun's Seasons" and Homer.

The Western Idea of a Live Town.

"Well, Dodge City may have been a rough place, I reckon it was. But it never came up to Newton. Why, Newton had as many as half a dozen first-class murders in one night. The man that couldn't carry a pistol was of no account in those days. I recollect one sleeping in a room with thirteen beds, two men in a bed. Each man kept under a vest or a pair of pants placed beneath the pillow every time. That room was known as the Texas room. Next every building in the country with whom he had any tie. He left her little house and a few hundred dollars—all he had—and there she is still, alone, making out to live by doing whatever work she can find in the neighborhood. Every old woman in the neighborhood respects her. She is known as "Laicy" for miles down the river. "I did my best to hire her to come and keep house for me," said the pilot, "I'd have given the grip. Laicy would have been worth a dozen white woman in Oregon. But she wouldn't come. I don't know as she's done looking for Pomeroy to come back yet, and she's going to stay just where she is. Well, I never missed a time waving her hand to me when I passed, at least I can say that I have not missed a time when I passed, and there isn't much else to say on the river she doesn't know."—Oregon letter.

A Mistake.

"Engaged this week?"
"Yes, I have one or two."
"Are you very much in love?"
"Not very much, I'm sorry to say."
"Why, what's the matter?"
"Oh, nothing; he's very handsome, and has some money, but he's a mistake in one thing."
"What's that?"
"He doesn't like me."

Saving His Capital.

"Do a goose?" angrily exclaimed the man to his wife, who continued his absurd and excessive laughter. "Do nothing but cackle, cackle, all the time."
"I dear," she sweetly replied; "and I'm going to keep on cackling every once saved the capital of a kind of cackling can save your husband from going to pieces."

As Good Keep a Secret.

Democratic Nominations.

For President—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for state offices, and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of other business will be held in the City of Grand Rapids, in Powers' Opera House, on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1884,

Commencing at 12 o'clock noon.

All voters of this state, irrespective of party associations and differences, who can unite with us in an effort for a reform of abuses and a pure and economical administration of government, and all who favor a reduction of tariff taxation, and a reform of our tariff laws, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rule adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

H. F. PENNINGTON, JEROME EDDY, Chairman.
Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to two delegates.

Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of J. Milo Eaton, in Charlevoix, on Saturday, Aug. 16, at two o'clock p. m. The attendance of every member is desired.

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS

R. A. Alger, of Detroit, and Archibald Buttars, of Charlevoix, were nominated for governor and lieutenant governor, by the republican state convention, at Detroit, this morning.

The state convention has at last recognized northern Michigan, by the nomination of Mr. Buttars, and Charlevoix and adjoining counties will no doubt put their best work into the canvas to elect him, to insure future recognition. We congratulate Mr. Buttars for his success in a convention with so many prominent and active gentlemen as candidates for the same position.

Notes and News.

The greenbackers and democrats at Lansing are solid for fusion. There is scarcely a kicker there.

The lumber trade at Bay City is improving, and the planing mills are running to their full capacity.

All the elements hostile to the welfare of the country are arraying themselves against Cleveland.—Perry Belmont.

The republican organs have temporarily turned their mud batteries upon the prohibitionists. They hate a temperenzler almost as intensely as they do a democrat.—Marshall Expounder

'Tis said that Tammany will collectively pronounce for Cleveland and individually for Butler. Neither of these candidates need count with confidence on the support of such a gang of tricksters.—Detroit Times.

"The issue is now clearly defined again between corruption and honesty, between extravagance and economy, between the army of officeholders and the army of the people, and the result is not doubtful.—Gov. Walker.

"A third party cannot be built up in Michigan by a division of the electoral ticket this fall."—Republican organ. Every intimation of such a proceeding checks and shortens republican sail, for it means death to republican rule in this state.

The remains of sergeant Edward Israel, one of the victims of the Greely Arctic expedition, arrived at Kalamazoo last Monday, and was buried with appropriate public ceremonies. All business houses were closed, and the people turned out en masse.

The independent republican press are moving heaven and earth to further Butler's chances as a third candidate alone. They are opposing fusion with all their vigor, and trying to convince Butlerites that they can possibly carry Michigan alone over Blaine and Cleveland, while a combination would disgust both Butler republicans and straightout democrats, and give the state to Blaine. Before the July convention they were afraid of Butler, and now their only hopelies in defeating fusion. Every Butler man who believes this nonsense and opposes fusion, works against his own interest, and to the advantage of republicans. Fusion is necessary to defeat Blaine in this state, and any other course all things are defeat to the opposition.

Concerning Fusion.

Newaygo Tribune: The question is one which must be met by both parties. They have twice joined forces in Michigan and in our judgment the results have, on the whole fairly justified the means.

An effort is being made all along the line to bring a union of all the opposition to the republican party in Michigan. The opposition can accomplish something in this way, as they did two years ago, while it would be simply folly to attempt a triangular fight.—Muskegon News.

The democrats and greenbackers in Kent county pooled their issues in nominating a county, setting an example for the state conventions which meet on the 19th and 20th of this month. "In unity there is strength." Muskegon Workingman's Journal.

That Five Cent Veto.

Ald. Duffy of New York, exposed the animus of the fight on Cleveland for his veto of the five cent fare bill. We had thought it strange that the workingmen who now ride for five cents, should be fretting themselves to death because the "dudes" and "pharisees" have to pay ten cents. It turns out that the real sufferers by the veto are not the workingmen, but a lot of real estate men who expected to make a fortune out of Harlem property, and the rich contractors, and others who intended to build out there. They expected and hoped to create an exodus of city residents, not workingmen, to their suburban region. Why the workingmen of the whole country should take up their lost cause is a mystery.—The Million.

Hendricks.

Mr. Hendricks' name in Indiana is a tower of strength, and the same is equally true of his great influence throughout the country. In 1876 Mr. Hendricks was elected vice president on a ticket with Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, but did not take his seat as presiding officer of the senate of the United States. He is again a candidate for the same office with another of New York's favorite sons. Again he will be elected, and this time he will be inaugurated. Cleveland and Hendricks is now the battle-cry, and under this banner the democratic party will take possession of the government.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Anecdote from the Cow-Boy Country

Two ladies, one from the East and the other from the West, were sitting last summer on the veranda of one of our fashionable frontier hotels in Miles City chatting together, when two cattlemen, clad in leather pants, buckskin shirts and sombreros, rode up.

"Oh, my," exclaimed the Eastern lady, "there are some of those horrid cow-boys; let us go inside."

"Why, you wretch," cried the little Western woman, "that's my husband," pointing to the foremost horseman.

"And the other?" inquired the Eastern lady.

"My brother," said the Western lady.—Chicago Tribune Letter.

The late Bishop Jacobson, of Chester, Eng., was once present when two clergymen of his church were discussing a sermon preached by a Dean, who —to introduce political slang into ecclesiastical affairs—was somewhat "on the fence." Said one: "It struck me as being rather low." "That's curious," said the other "for I thought it was pretty high. What did you think of it, Mr. Lord?" appealing to the Bishop. "Why," replied his Lordship, "to tell the truth, I thought it decidedly long."

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss in the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 3-tf

Hannah, Lay & Co., have reduced the price of excursion tickets from Petoskey to Charlevoix to 25 cents for the round trip. At this rate the Faxton and Grand Rapids are loaded nearly every day. The running time of the boats is such that parties have nearly three hours to view our town. The many people who come here must certainly be of some benefit to our town, especially if we consider its future greatness as a summer resort.

The steamer T. S. Faxton will give an excursion to Mackinac, on Saturday, Aug. 16, leaving Norwood at 10 a. m., Charlevoix, 11.25; Petoskey, 1.00 p. m.; Harbor Springs, 1.45; Cross Village, 4.00; arriving at Mackinac at 7.00 p. m. Returning, leave Mackinac at 2.00 p. m. Sunday, arriving at Cross Village at 5.00; Petoskey, 7.15; Harbor Springs 8.00, laying at the latter place over night and continuing on regular time Monday morning. Music by Harbor Springs cornet band. Tickets for round trip one dollar.

One of the cleanest little monthlies we get is The Poultry Keeper, published at Chicago, No. 5 of which is just at hand. Its popularity is attested by an affidavit of the publisher showing 17,495 prepaid subscriptions on Aug. 4th. It consists of 16 quarto pages, well illustrated, and printed on heavy white book paper, and its editorial matter covers a wide range in the field indicated by its title. For sample copies or subscriptions address The Poultry Keeper, 89 Randolph street, Chicago.

Arnold Germau caused Lischewski, living on a farm about three miles from Boyne, committed suicide last Sunday night by shooting him self. It seems that on Friday previous he had had a quarrel with his wife and family about some trivial matter and they all set about chastising the old man. He was beaten black and blue and turned out of doors. Having made repeated efforts to compromise, it is supposed he considered suicide the best means to set the matter and on the night mentioned above he entered a carpenter shop near the dwelling, carrying a gun with him, the butt of which he rested upon a tool chest, and placing the muzzle against his body opposite his heart he fired, using a stick to reach the trigger. When found he still held the stick in his hand. The gun was heavily charged with powder and contained two bullets, both of which passed through his heart and entirely through his body, making an immense wound, which must have caused instant death.—Statesman.

Prof. E. H. Crane, than whom no man has more friends in Petoskey, returned from California on Saturday last accompanied by his wife. Prof. Crane has spent a year in California examining rocks, looking after pre-historic remains, pursuing ethnological inquiries among the Digger Indians, and in short sticking his long nose into every scientific matter on the Pacific slope. He is going to make Michigan his home, but is not yet decided as to the particular locality. Petoskey people would be very glad to have Prof. Crane and his wife make the decision in favor of Petoskey. We are promised a resume of the results of his scientific investigations, for publication soon.—Record.

W. M. Beach and son, of Fowlerville, gave us a pleasant call on Saturday. Mr. Beach and family are recreating here, and like many others he would like to invest in business and become a citizen with us. He says it is next to impossible to buy desirable business lots on Bridge street. That the prices are almost prohibitory as compared with desirable locations in larger cities, and that many lots are not for sale at any price. It is to be regretted that this is so, for a few firms like Beach & Son we believe would add a very considerable vigor to our business interests. However these high prices indicate an abundant faith on the part of our land holders in the future growth of the town, and this faith will doubtless continue while we have promises of a railroad, and while our resorts continue in popularity.

WHY HE VETOED IT.

Reasons Given by Governor Cleveland for Disapproving the Five Cent Fare Bill.

Existing Contracts and Constitutional Requirements Ignored by the General Assembly.

The Measure Intended to Benefit Only People of Some Means and Considerable Leisure.

Workingmen Riding on "L" Roads at Five Cent Fares—The Clamor Raised by Designing Politicians.

[New York special.]

Since Governor Cleveland was first spoken of so prominently as a candidate for the Presidency, certain of his official acts have been brought up by his enemies to create prejudices against him. Now that he is actually the nominee of his party it will be the more necessary for his opponents to suppress some and falsify other truths in regard to the acts of his administration as Governor of the Empire state. His veto of Assembly bill No. 58, commonly known as the "Elevated Railroad Five Cent Fare Bill," in March, 1883, is the act which has been most prominently urged against him during the campaign to influence the laboring classes. It is safe to predict, however, that none of his opponents will dare to state in detail the reasons which the Governor gave for his veto, or mention all the circumstances under which it was proposed to reduce the fares on the New York elevated roads to five cents. The bill forbade the collection of more than five cents fare between the Battery and Harlem on any elevated railroad. For the past two years, by an act of the Legislature, the railroads have been compelled to sell tickets at the rate of six for 25 cents, and these hours were specially fixed to accommodate the laboring classes during the hours for their passage to and from work. This bill was to make the fare 5 cents all day long, and was confessedly in option up and urged by Wall street people who were fearing the Elevated Railroad stocks, although a popular question was cleverly worked up to aid their scheme.

Impressed with its importance, and, aware of the public interest which it had excited, the Governor exercised the greatest care and made most diligent inquiry into the measure before proceeding his decision, which he, finally, in a veto message, setting forth his views with great fullness. "I am convinced," he said, "that in all cases the share which falls upon the Executive in passing the legislation of the State should be in no manner influenced by fidelity nor by the expression of his carefully considered and unbiased judgment. In his conclusions he may err, but if he has fairly and honestly acted, he has performed his duty and has given to the people of the State his best endeavors. Having, in obedience to this rule, he gave a history of the elevated roads and the agreements made between them, and the State and city of New York.

"If no act was passed, known as the rapid transit act, creating a board of four assessors to be appointed by the Mayor of New York Five with power to regulate various matters in connection with the elevated roads. The Board was appointed, and they made a special agreement with the company that it should charge for any distance less than five miles not more than ten cents, and not more than two cents for each additional mile or fraction of a mile. It was further agreed that the company should, between 5:30 and 8:30 in the morning and evening, run what was known as commutation trains, for the benefit of workingmen going to or coming from their work, on which no more than five cents fare should be charged from the Battery to Fifty-ninth street, and no more than seven cents from the Battery to Harlem. It was still further agreed that when the net increase of the road, after all expenditures, taxes and charges were paid, should amount to a dividend of 8 per cent. on the capital stock of the company, then, or within six months thereafter, the company should run trains at all hours of the day at reduced rates. These agreements were reported by the Board of Commissioners to the Mayor, and, in the fall of 1875, they were approved by the Board of Aldermen. The New York Elevated Railroad Company thereupon completed its road to Exchange, a distance of two miles.

"The bill I face me," said the Governor, "provides that, notwithstanding all the statutes that have been passed, and which have been done the reader, pass years shall be cured the whole length of this road for a certain sum much less than is provided for in any of such statutes or stipulations. In the beginning of the Constitution I am of the opinion that in the legislative proceedings which I have detailed, and in the act that passed it, the interest of the company was constructed and insured. Every such contract is based upon the consideration which is promised by the other, and the Constitution of the United States shall provide that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contract.

"The contract section to say that, even if this view of the case were not sufficient decisive duty clear of the question, I must add, I am convinced that the Legislature was, when a railroad shall be organized from time to time, after or reduce the rates of fares, from 5 cents to 3 cents, and I shall not be subjected to the payment of the company, or the reduction of East Jordan.

Building at East Jordan has begun again in earnest. The Stoepel Lumber Co. have their large new barn well along. A. B. Keene's new building is progressing finely; when finished it will be occupied by F. Low enberg as a dry goods and clothing store. Ground has been broken for a skating rink 50x100 feet, just north of Mr. Porter's house, on Main street; Will A. Stone is "head pusher."

Next Saturday the steamer Friant will leave East Jordan at 1 p. m. with an excursion party for Mackinac island, stopping at the landings on the "arm" and at Charlevoix. As the picnic will be under the management of the band, all lovers of excursions are anticipating a good time.

The Nellie Booth brought a party from Boyne last Sunday.

The people here miss the Gazelle more than would be supposed; though her trips have been so regular through all kinds of weather, that her service should be appreciated.

The steamer Wright, running in connection with the Friant, is doing a good passenger business, as resorters and others from Petoskey can come to East Jordan and return the same day.

A large and lively excursion party from Boyne, under the auspices of the I. O. G. T., visited East Jordan Tuesday evening. They returned home "sober" at a seasonable hour.

Burgess.

Levi House, the model farmer of Hayes, has a mowing machine and sulky rake.

Mr. Wilkes, of Charlevoix, visited with his son-in law, Frank Kane, last Sunday.

James Bartlett addressed a crowded house at Whitford's school house last Saturday, at which time another Butler club was organized.

Elvin Hale and wife visited friends in South Arm last week.

I. S. Webster and wife visited friends in Boyne and Eveline last Friday and Saturday.

Moses Cooper entertained friends last Sunday in his usual hospitable manner.

Green corn and cholera morbus have made their appearance in Hayes.

Your correspondent thinks the greenbackers are getting crazier than ever in Hayes. [Don't believe it.—Ed.] They will even talk politics on Sunday.

Ironton.

The John Otis came in Sunday loaded with ore and vegetables, for the Pine Lake Iron Co.

Mr. C. G. Ratcliffe who has been in town a short time, has returned to Chicago.

The "boss" fisherman of Ironton was beaten two to one Saturday last.

Scarlet fever continues here. Two or three children have it in a mild form.

Mr. J. G. Peterson has gone to Grand Rapids this week.

Preaching last Sunday at the school house, by the Rev. C. F. Van Anken, at 3 o'clock.

We miss the well known whistle of the Gazelle this week.

INSCRIBED TO THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

BY A. TOILER.

The Knights of Labor, Jim, are coming,
Their shackles they've thrown off,
And rest assured these garments old
Is proud eminent they'll doff.

Their weekly meetings you may see
In rooms above the floor,
For they have put the ideal Jim,
That they are slaves no more.

Some one has told them that
"The laborer is worthy of his hire,"
And every week they send his mite,
And send it loud and higher.

But what d'you think will come of it?
Says Jim, with look of pride,
I'll tell you how, they'll raise a breeze
That'll shake the hills of night.

I know these boys, my friends, too well,
To think they'll sit on nothing,
When all the platforms that are writ
Aren't worth a rotten's row.

And now look out, friend Jim, I say,
Forget will see, I'll bet,
A bigger storm of snowflakes fall,
Than you have seen as yet.

They're coming from the workshops, Jim,
And iron each hill and vale,
And bet your boots, old Joe, they'll beat
And thrash the shavers with flail.

Some God or Devil whispers them,
"You've got your years down yonder,
So bow beneath the golden stars,
You cannot hear it thunder."

But, Jim, the time is coming soon,
When all these noble sons of toil
Will stand erect and claim their due,—
The heirship to the fruitful soil.

And don't forget, old boy, this thing,
That they will pull together,
And make the mighty welkin ring
On the ides of next November.

G. A. R. PICNIC.

Overlooking Pine lake, at Horton's bay, is a location with an easy descent toward the lake, covered with a vigorous growth of hard maple trees,—just the place one would select for a basket picnic. Its central location, its beauty, and its many other advantages for such an occasion, is no doubt the reason it was selected by the committee from the various posts, G. A. R., in this county, in which to hold their first annual camp-fire, reunion, and picnic.

The large and commodious side-wheel steamer, Queen of the Lakes, (by the way one of the best excursion boats on these lakes), was chartered for the day, and started from Charlevoix with nearly 200 passengers, arriving at the grounds soon after 9:00 o'clock. Then going to Boyne, she returned in time for dinner with another large party.

The Wright brought a party of over a hundred from East Jordan, and the Nellie Booth a smaller party from Boyne and Bay Springs.

After the veterans had received all these people they were tired and hungry, and it did not require a second invitation to get the baskets opened and contents spread on the commodious tables previously erected by the local committee. It is estimated that over 500 people sat down to dinner.

The reporter and wife were invited to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shanbut, and right there is where we got in our best work. Frank has a reputation as a "good provider," and Mrs. S. understands well how to serve her guests, so we were partially prepared for the good things. But this occasion was "extra," and we were not prepared for the feast. In addition to a very large quantity of sandwiches, cakes, pies, and the usual creteens of a basket picnic, there had been prepared a roast pig,—dressed, stuffed, and roasted whole. It was fat and tender, and with the dressing was well seasoned and cooked. It was carved by Capt. J. S. Wyckoff, distributed at that and other tables, and relished by a large number of people. Other tables were also well provided with substantial eatables, and after all were satisfied, the fragments left would have filled several large baskets.

To Mrs. A. J. Stroud, of Horton's Bay, is due the thanks of the picnic party for providing hot tea and coffee with milk and sugar for all who wished.

Not content with simply "something to eat," Messrs. M. J. Steckmann, Robert Miller, Sam See, H. Borkus, Bert Brown, Wm. Ramsey, Wm. Atchison, E. P. Hodges, and Mr. Litzau proposed to have a true veteran dinner. Lighting a camp-fire, they proceeded to boil their own coffee, roast their "sow-belly," and eat hard tack, singing songs, and telling stories. Mr. Steckmann was in his usual happy mood, and created much merriment by taking the head of Shanbut's pig by the snout, and passing around among the veterans, offer to each a chance to take a bite, some of whom did as if they had seen nothing to eat in a month.

A. J. Stroud also passed around large quantities of baked pork and beans, which went off lively.

After dinner the following program of exercises was followed:

Appropriate Songs by a Glee Club organized for the occasion.

Address of Welcome, by Rev. T. J. Hill, of Walter Clifford post.

Music by East Jordan Cornet Band.

Response by Col. Jas. Sloan, of Mecosta post.

Response by Col. Wm. Mears, of Cowles post.

Response by Maj. E. H. Green, of Baxter post.

Five-minute Speeches by Veterans, interspersed with vocal and instrumental music.

Recitation, "Sheridan's Ride," by Mrs. Lucy Bisbee, of Bay Springs, with a historical introduction by Maj. E. H. Green.

"Memories of the War," by Hon. Chester Gerard Mossling, Dress Parade, photo. by Babbitt, in miscellaneous waiting, not to illustrate.

These exercises continued until time for Boyne and East Jordan people to start for home; and Charlevoix people were ready to go as soon as the "Queen" could return from Boyne.

This is the first general reunion of the veterans in this county, and it was in every way so successful that others will be sure to follow. It is also intimated, though we have no positive information on the subject, that the veterans alone, without their families, will have a campfire at least one day and a night, with many adjuncts of a soldier's life, at some place in the county this fall.

The success of this picnic is due to the excellent committee of arrangements from all the posts, ably seconded by a local committee at Horton's Bay, consisting of Messrs. Stroud, Jenkins, and Olds, with their wives. The arrangements for transportation were as complete as possible with the number of boats at command, and the grounds were fitted up with speaker's stand, plenty of benches, tables, swings, and other accessories necessary to the occasion.

NOTES.

Stevens post carry a large, handsome banner. The body is red cashmere, with gold border, trimmings, and tassels. In the center is worked in red, white, and blue silk, the emblem of the order, with the words, "Stevens Post, No. 66, G. A. R." As a whole, it is the finest banner in the order in the county, and reflects great credit on the ladies who made and presented it to the post.

At Boyne, the day's services concluded with a dance at Lewis hall in the evening.

Maj. E. H. Green, and Adjt. Frank Shanbut, of Baxter post, were enthusiastic promoters of the picnic, and to their efforts is due no small share of its success. No doubt others were equally enthusiastic, but their work was not brought so directly to our notice.

There was a noticable absence of liquor and its attendant results, rowdyism, or anything of a nature to mar the pleasure of the visitors.

It is intimated that Robt. Miller takes the lead as a coffee boiler. His pot of this beverage was clear and strong.

The ladies' aid society, of Horton's Bay, have been purchasing an organ and on Wednesday, with a lemonade stand they made quite enough to pay a balance of $20 to clear it from debt.

Mrs. Wilson, 72 years old, mother of Mrs. Plummer, of Bay Springs, visited the picnic Wednesday, and enjoyed the exercises. This lady sent five boys to the war, lost two in battle, and one soon after returning home.

C. E. Baldwin, photo. artist, took two negatives of the G. A. R. boys and citizens, while in line. When finished, the pictures will be 10x12 in size.

E. Carpenter feels well paid for his day at the picnic. His largest brook trout, caught in Horton's creek weighed 2 pounds 7 ounces, and measured 19½ inches in length. Can anyone report a better one.

THE EAST.

THE valuation of the property of the city of Boston, as returned by the assessors, is $882,649,000, and the rate of taxation is $17 on $1,000, which is the highest ever known. The decrease in valuation in the last two years amounts to $10,630,000.

GEORGE W. BRADLEY & SON, extensive mahogany dealers of Philadelphia, made an assignment and Shinn, Platt & Co., owners of the Home Woolen Mill at Allentown, Pa., failed for $70,000. Both positions resulted precipitantly, three men were killed and several hurt.

A STARTLING shock of earthquake was felt along the Atlantic coast on the afternoon of the 10th inst., extending from Philadelphia to Portland, Maine, and as far inland as Cleveland. The shock lasted about ten seconds and caused very serious alarm, particularly in New York City. Several public buildings were thoroughly shaken, walls and chimneys were cracked, and people in the basement horse dealers were almost frightened out of their wits. Bedsteads moaned, women fainted and prayers and supplications were sounded. Before the shock began a dark cloud appeared in the sky and there was a puff of wind such as usually precedes a heavy rainfall. It was some hours before the people got over their fright. Many newspapers of some were prostrated by the occurrence. A second shock was felt at Cleveland.

THE Wall Street Bank of New York has closed its doors. The shortages are said to be about $300,000 and as soon as it is discovered, C. F. Dickinson, a depositor, sold some of the collaterals of the institution.

THE New York State Editorial Convention, which met at Utica last week, adopted resolutions in favor of a uniform copyright law which would give to authors a copyright in any building, and structure, the architects of the work, such as the construction of weekly papers, the establishment of a State purchasing agency, the reduction of the hours of work per day to ten and the prohibition of child labor. It was urged that the duty on paper be taken off and increased so as to the money back and for the benefit of the manufacturers.

THE old Rock Island Bank at Dublin, Harford county, Md., has been occupied by the same manufacturing firm, Messrs. Silver & Bro., for two successive terms, was destroyed by the two men in pursuing it in the flames. The financial loss is about $75,000.

THE business portion of Mount Holly, N. J., was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 11th inst., including Rudderow's Opera House, Smith's Hotel and Mrs. Lippincott's clothing business on the 30th. Both had their stocks and fixtures insured for $5,000 each.

THE Democratic State Convention of Georgia met at Atlanta and made the following nominations: Governor, H. D. McDaniel; Secretary of State, N. C. Barnett; Controller, W. A. Wright; Treasurer, R. A. Hardman; Attorney General, Clifford Anderson. The nominees, with the exception of Hardman, are the present incumbents.

THE Republicans of Michigan, in convention at Detroit, nominated Gen. B. A. Alger for Governor and C. A. Lucas for Lieutenant Governor. Hazen S. Pingree, Mayor of Detroit, and the Hon. Wesley Mill of Allegheny, Pa., failed for $70,000. To platform consisted protectionists, three men were killed and several hurt.

A DISPATCH from Cleveland, Ohio, says: Ex-Governor Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, died at his residence in this city at 2:30 o'clock this morning. He had been ill for some time, and his death was not unexpected. Mr. Thurman was born in Virginia, November 13, 1813, and was therefore in his seventy-first year. He was a lawyer by profession, and was elected to Congress from the Chillicothe district in 1844, and served in the House of Representatives for two terms. He was elected Governor of Ohio in 1867, and was re-elected in 1869. He was elected United States Senator in 1868, and served in that body for six years. He was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President in 1880, but was defeated by General Hancock. He was also a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President in 1884, but was defeated by Governor Cleveland.

THE SOUTH.

G. H. HEYL & Co. of Louisville, have addressed a circular to the creditors men of Fat Dutch, asking them to hand all the business in the country for four weeks, in order to enable the firm to resume business on the production. A fire which broke out in a watchman at Catlettsburg, Ky., destroyed the two packet landings of Jones, McKenzie, Reed Kinner, and John Bias. Damage caused under the tillers walls of the saloon, J. P. Dickinson, decorator, and some of the collaterals of the institution.

THE New York State Editorial Convention, which met at Utica last week, adopted resolutions in favor of a uniform copyright law which would give to authors a copyright in any building, and structure, the architects of the work, such as the construction of weekly papers, the establishment of a State purchasing agency, the reduction of the hours of work per day to ten and the prohibition of child labor. THE WINNING TICKET.

Our delegate to the state convention at Grand Rapids, Mr. J. Milo Eaton, made a quick trip, leaving Tuesday evening and returning this morning. The convention had nothing to fight over, but went to work, put a ticket in nomination, and returned to their homes to elect it.

And every man will be elected.

A combination was effected on a basis similar to that of two years ago, so far as applied to state officers, and the electoral ticket was divided by each party naming six electors to be voted for by both parties, with a seventh man for their own party alone, the proportion of votes in the electoral college to correspond to the party vote cast for the extra delegate.

ELECTORS.

H. O. Ross, Petoskey. W. B. Moran, Detroit.
Flanders, Benton Har. Rev. J. R. Savage, Manistee. A. Millard, Mt. Pleasant. Mose W. Field, Detroit. Wilkinson Mills, Detroit. A. W. Hanchett, Albion. Benton Bell, Saginaw. Fred Cumnian, Lansing. A. S. Dykman, Van Buren. J. Watkins, Lapeer.

STATE TICKET.

Governor—Josiah W. Begole.
Lieutenant-Governor—Maynard, of Marquette
Attorney-General—F. W. Cook, of Muskegon.
Secretary of State—Wm. Shakespeare, of Kalamazoo.
Treasurer—James Blair, of Grand Rapids.
Auditor-General—Geo. P. Sanford, of Lansing.
Superintendent of Public Instruction—David Parsons, of Detroit.
Member of Board of Education—Vendervere, of Grand Haven.

Most of these names are well known in state politics, and their record gives assurance of success at the polls, and of economy in their administration when elected.

THE BABE'S PRAYER.

She knelt with her sweet hands folded;
Her little head bowed meek and mild,
Where the dead vines lapped at the window
And the sky was thick with snow.
Her voice, soft, dumb with winter,
Fell, hesitating, dumb with awe;
And up through the tender silence
Rose softly the baby prayer.

"Bless all whom I love, dear Father,
And help me to be good," she said.
Then, stirred to a sudden inquiry,
She looked at the shining face
Pictured on the wall in the brown maple
Of the bird of the Apocalypse,
And heard of the wondrous blossoms,
And felt of the snow between.

"The second time I pray," she whispered,
"When the orioles nest by the river,
They say we shall be glad, and sing,
Oh, help me to grow in spring;
And the flowers say that I need to gather,
I ask, I ask from you in May.
The days I've tried to, she prays,
Down deep in the sacred to-day."

My curly head is child with snowflakes,
And hearts must be cold with care,
Ere we kneel a fresh shrine
As fearless by the form in prayer;
And by that wee dimpled arm-sweep
In its mother-love coming,
For vision and the winged in water
In the second of the Lord is coming.

HATTIE'S LESSON.

BY SARA B. BOSE.

"Oh, girls, there is the loveliest fellow coming here to board; he has the falling of eyes, and the darlingest mustache; he is awfully rich, and one of the smartest lawyers in Chicago besides, so we'll have some material that is worth our while to practice on now," cried Hattie Linton, as decorator bound into her boarding house parlor with a satisfied sparkle in the big gray eyes.

"Is that so?" exclaimed Nellie Linton, opening her blonde eyelids a little wider than usual. "I am mad about it, Marie! and Conners is fearfully dull this summer. But what brings Adonis to this out of the way place?"

"Search me, my dear, I'm sure," said Hattie breathlessly. "And he is the handsomest man I think that I ever saw, and I have had an introduction to him, too," with a triumphant nod.

"But where did you meet him? And what's his name?" mounted matter-of-fact Nellie Wingett.

"His name is Mr. Eighme, and I met him at the station this morning. I went down to pick up Sadie Mow, and became in on the train. Papa had met him some where before, and he asked papa for a good boarding place, and papa directed him here, and he introduced him to me, too."

"I believe Hattie Linton has an understanding with her father to make her acquainted with every masculine he comes," said Martha Mason, with a little sneering laugh. "And I believe the two will never cease until some poor fellow falls a victim."

"Oh, no! Mr. Eighme is not any such fellow, Martha," said Hattie, a little quickly. "He is as down on flatters as I am, besides he abhors as he can possibly be," Hattie was fibbing a little, and therefore thought herself justified.

"Oh, shall," cried Hattie, in indignation severe. "And wait till you see Mr. Eighme and then judge whether he admires me or not."

At this stage, cried Martha, "Oh, waver, ah! ballon, Hat Linton, that you brought that stranger in your pony carriage from the station."

"I did for fact," replied Hattie, engaging the girls' evident jealousy, "I was not going to leave the poor fellow to wait seven miles about this warm morning."

"Let him walk it in the stage, then," said Nellie. "It was not at all proper of you, cousin."

"Who cares for proper?" laughed Hattie. "I am not going for that handsome lawyer, and you, girls, can't prove me so try it, if you dare."

Hattie's pretty face. She need have fascinated him somehow," said dressie.

"I have treated him with my very best girls he is my property, and hands off, if you please."

So saying, Hattie ran upstairs to her mother's room to remove her hat and draping gloves.

Hattie Linton was a light-hearted, gay young girl of twenty-two. Her mother died in the first year of her youngest daughter. She was soundly daughter, and had been a favorite of her father's good for her, and as her father had more wealth to ask during the week one time I was still. What are you going to do with them all, that?"

"Oh, I shall get rid of the poor fellows," said she, with unbecoming air vanity. "I don't think there will be anything sore about it, at least I hope not."

"I don't think there will either," said Martha Mason, with unpleasant emphasis. "It does sound so silly to hear Hattie Linton speak of them would have any way you could fix it. Hat Linton."

So saying the three slighted ones bent into successful laughter and ran out of the room.

Hattie laughed a little to herself, "I'm quite sure I would smile if somebody would pretend to laugh out of me," she said, "and I have treated many a fellow to that."

Hattie then went to work Mrs. Mason and Martha Mason's carriage, and when they returned they were in the best of humor, and after eating a hearty dinner they all went to their rooms, originally Hattie's, and Martha's.

Hattie was not at all absorbed in the watering morning, and deliberated what she had heard something from Hattie and Hattie's flirtation with the new boarder. Hattie's victory by calling her down was not to be endured, so she went to work to plan a revenge for it.

It was now at Mrs. Thompson's boarding house, and Hattie was not acquainted with the strangers and evenings, and the other girls, then, so

"Did you ever?" cried Mrs. Mason, in a shocked tone. "I would teach Hattie Linton something if she was my girl."

"She means nothing," said Mrs. Thompson, who was not a gossiping landlady, but she gave Hattie a hint of what had been said, only, however, to make the willful girl more bent on playing them than ever, and she exercised all her powers to fascinate the handsome lawyer, who, in return, made flattering speeches, and even pathetic enough to impress a heart of polished steel.

Hattie related with a great deal of "poetic license" all of these compliments and idle flattery to the jealous girls, who in turn talked it over with their equally jealous mothers, until there was a quiet undercurrent going the rounds ready to break out any suspicious moment into a fulsome tide of scandal.

Hattie was greatly elated at the jealous looks cast upon her, and fully believed that she would have at least "an offer" to hold if before Mr. Eighme left them, but some way he did not come to the point; but on the last evening he said to Hattie,

"Shall you be glad to see me when I come down again, Miss Hattie?

Hattie's heart gave a great jump as she thought, "he is in earnest," and then said, demurely:

"Very glad, but I thought your business was over?"

"And did you think I should forget the charming acquaintances I have made here because my business was finished?"

Hattie blushed and was silent; and he, knowing exactly what was in her mind, strove to make the parting as pleasant as possible, without saying anything definite, sent on:

"Would you drive down to the station for me on Saturday afternoon if I were to come out on that day?"

"I usually drive out on days, I had as soon call for you as not."

"Many thanks; my charming little character," said he, coloring, and then he bade her a pleasant adieu, leaving Hattie with an odd little feeling in her heart.

"Not much to tell of," she mused. "But I can tell it in such a way that the girls will think it a great deal more than it is, and I think he will come to the point by and by. But I don't care much whether he does or not. I like Fred Norwood twice better."

Poor Fred, whom she had treated so scurvily, and who had ever been kind to her and always ready to shield her in any scrape she might get into, but here she also was burst open and the whole group of girls assailed her.

"Hattie Linton, you are a perfect fiend, to treat poor Fred Norwood as you have done," cried Mrs. Mason, in a shocked tone. "I would teach Hattie Linton something if she was my girl."

Local Temperance Work.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Officers of the Society.

President—Mrs. C. Y. Cook.
First Vice President—Mrs. L. R. Allen.
Second Vice President—Mrs. J. T. Iddings.
Third Vice President—Mrs. C. F. Van Auken.
Corresponding secretary—Mrs. D. C. Loveday.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. R. Suffell.
Treasurer—Mrs. C. J. Strang.

The Gospel temperance meeting held at the church Sunday afternoon was quite well attended, and very interesting. Although Mrs. Carse says she is not a speaker we have heard a number say it was the best temperance meeting of the season. We expect more meetings will follow if there is interest enough manifested on the part of the ladies to warrant it. Mothers, you who have boys to save, come out and help us.

The World's W. C. T. U.

Finally, dear sisters, may I submit to your plan which is the outgrowth of my special studies in this most eventful year. On the Pacific coast I felt the pulsation of the newest America which includes that true "garden of the gods"—California, with its semi-tropic climate, and invites not only Europe but Asia to a seat in its banqueting hall. I looked into the mystic face of the orient, and rejoiced in the breezy breath of Japan, the France, even as China is the England of the east Pacific coast. I learned the magic transformations in the civilization of Japan, its readiness to take up western customs and the consequent danger lest our vices become domesticated there. I visited the opium dens of San Francisco and was appalled by the degradation resulting from a poison habit which ensnares the victim more, but his home less, than does the frenzy of the alcohol dream. Meanwhile, missionaries to the orient assured me that "since the crusade" a great temperance work is going on in the cities of India, China, and Japan, among the English speaking population, and letters from our Connecticut president, Mrs. Treadwell, now traveling on the continent of Europe, assured me that leading pastors of Paris are anxious to have a W. C. T. U. organized in that metropolis of the whole world. I know our British cousins across the line and across the sea would heartily co-operate in the movement and so resolved to urge my sisters to signalize the epoch we rejoice in by the formation of an international W. C. T. U. that shall belt the globe and join the east and west in an organized attack upon the poison habits of both hemispheres. We can do no more at this convention than to authorize the initial steps of such a government. For a year or two the work must be wholly carried on by correspondence and throng the press. Few have as yet the international spirit. I found more of this class on the other coast than here. These friends, better informed than we, and not at present so enlisted in the temperance work, will largely aid in this new and most catholic endeavor. I suggest little more to-day than that the prestige of our great society be the fulcrum for a preliminary lift in this splendid enterprise.

Beloved, we have given hostages, not to fortune, but to humanity. We are building better than we know. We stand not only for the cause of temperance, but for the divine womanhood that shall ere long bring in the era of "sweeter manners, purer laws." We stand for the mighty forces which level up not down, and which shall draw manhood up to woman's standard of purity in the personal conduct of life. We are the prophets of a time when the present fashionable frivolities of women and money worship of men shall find themselves confronted by God's high or law of a complete humanity resulting from:

"Two heads in council; two beside the hearth;
Two in the toilet business of the world;
Two in the liberal arts of life;
Two plumbers dropped in;
To sound the abyss of science and the secrets of the mind."

For the world begins to see that

"Nestling links to bind two souls are wrought,
Where passion takes nowhere read from thought.

In all this wondrous battle let our motto be "womanliness first; afterward what you will." Let us follow with unchanged devotion the gleaming cross of Him who is "holiest among the mighty and mightiest among the holy," even that loving Christ whose gospel raises women up, and with her lifts toward heaven the world! "The combat deepens—on ye brave!" The battle is not yours, but God's.—Frances E. Willard in annual Address N. W. C. T. U. Convention, Detroit, Mich., Oct. 31, 1883.

☞Col. Frederick E. Goodrich's admirable "life" of Grover Cleveland is now ready; it is handsomely bound and printed, and contains upwards of 500 pages; it is illustrated by first class artists; it is from the pens of Messrs. H. Hallett & Co., of Portland, Maine. As a rapid biographer, Col. Goodrich doubtless stands without a rival in America, and the volume has the impress of the broadest information and most careful attention on every page. This is the biography that received the inestimable benefit of the active co-operation and assistance of Mr. Cleveland, his relatives and friends; this is the volume that is recommended by the friends and private secretary of the distinguished candidate; it is a true picture, drawn by a master hand, of the life of the statesman from the humble cradle to the present day, and presents a striking contrast to the score of so-called "lives" which are to a large extent filled with irrelevant matter made up from the newspapers of the day; those who are wise will subscribe only for the authentic Portland edition—the largest, cheapest, handsomest and best. The steel-plate portraits of Cleveland and Hendricks were engraved for the volume and are a standing rebuke to the caricatures which appear in the so called "lives" with big pretentions.

We understand that this authentic, standard edition, is outselling all others, more than ten to one, and that its agents are meeting with the most phenomenal success. A few more agents are wanted by the publishers; the most liberal terms are offered. It is a splendid chance for beginners, as with this grand book no one can fail to do a great business. The volume also contains a biography of Thomas A. Hendricks.

Railroad Matters.

Mr. Ashley, of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad, states that he will be able to make a good report of the Bellaire route to Charlevoix. It stated that the road will be completed either to Charlevoix or Frankfort within two years.

H. B. Chapman visited Vanderbilt last week for the purpose of talking over the feasibility of extending the Bay Springs and Boyne Falls narrow guage railroad to that place. A meeting of citizens was held, committees appointed to look over the ground and to solicit subscriptions, and a citizens' meeting called for Sept. 7th to confer upon the outcome of the survey. These men evidently mean business.

A Picnic Party.

The families of H. Bacon and Sanderson, of Boyne, are camping at Bear lake, and last Sunday invited many of their friends in to dine with them. The bill of fare included meat, fish, potatoes, baked beans, pancakes, tea, etc., all prepared by the campfire, served on tin pails and apparently struck the right spot" in the appetites of the guests. One of the curiosities was to watch H. Bacon, "flip" his pancakes. This department of cooking he confesses. The party will remain in camp this week.

M. E. church, Pastor and Congregation, most cordially invite all strangers, and resorters, to participate in the services held each Sabbath, morning and evening. L. G. RUTHERFORD, Chairman.

Dated at Muskegon, Aug. 6, 1884.

P. W. COOK,
Chairman committee, Muskegon.

For Auditor General.

Some years ago we worked in the office of the Lansing Journal, then owned and managed by Col. George P. Sanford, our present candidate for auditor general. We know Mr. Sanford to be a shrewd economist and careful manager in business, and we have no doubt he will carry his same principles with him in the service of the state. Every item of unnecessary expense will be cut off, and employes will be limited to the actual necessities of the department.

As a candidate he is entitled to the support of every voter opposed to the republican party. His acknowledged ability to fill the position, and his rare powers as a political organizer, makes his candidacy exceptionally strong. We believe he will be elected by a handsome majority.

"Public Office a Public Trust."

The Petoskey Record copies from the National Tribune, without comment, however, an article charging that Grover Cleveland, "while mayor of Buffalo vetoed an appropriation of $300 passed by the common council for the proper observance of decoration day."

The Record neglects to say why it was vetoed. In his message to the council, mayor Cleveland said; "I deem the object of this appropriation a most worthy one. The efforts of our veteran soldiers to keep alive the memory of their fallen comrades certainly deserves the aid and encouragement of their fellow citizens. We should all, I think, feel it a duty and privilege to contribute to the fraternity necessary to carry out such a purpose. And I should be much disappointed if an appeal to our citizens for voluntary subscriptions for this patriotic object should be in vain. But the money so contributed should be a free gift of the citizens and taxpayers, and should not be extorted from them by taxation. This is so because the purpose for which this money is asked does not involve their protection or interest as members of the community, and it may or may not be approved by them." In support of his message, Mayor Cleveland headed a subscription for the purpose with a liberal sum, and, with a hearty co-operation of citizens approving his action, the desired fund was raised promptly without resort to public moneys. This action elicited universal approval. The Buffalo Express, a leading republican paper, said: "A whole volume of sound sense and just principles of municipal government will be found condensed in a brief veto sent to the council by Mayor Cleveland. * * * The city government is a business establishment, and must be conducted on business principles. All these golden rules are laid down in disapproving a vote of $500 for decoration day,—a small sum for a worthy object; but as the mayor shows, it is not the amount of the appropriation, nor the merit of it, but the principal involved, which must be considered. Private bounty ought to be equal to such a call; and then, to prove that he thinks so, Mr. Cleveland privately contributes one tenth of the whole sum needed, thus supplementing excellent principle by liberal example."

The Tribune article further says: "As governor of New York he vetoed a bill passed at the legislature which made it a misdemeanor for any person to wear a G. A. R. badge who was not an honorably discharged soldier. The petition for the bill had been signed by all the G. A. R. posts of the state." The bill refered to was so full of errors as to become at once inoperative as a law, and it reached the governor too late to return for corrections. He was thus compelled to let it die without his signature, although he believed the provisions praiseworthy if they could have been carried out as intended.

When the "grand army" boys come to know the facts concerning Gov. Cleveland, and to understand the reasons for his vetoes, they will repudiate the party which resorts to falsehood and slander to defeat him.

Notes and News.

We commend Cleveland's letter for its compactness and clearness.—Saginaw Times.

Gov. Cleveland clearly defines his position in a brief and plain manner. —Port Huron Telegraph.

Cigar makers union No. 142, of Lockport, N. Y., have issued a circular endorsing Cleveland and Hendricks, and advising all labor unions to do likewise.

Mr. C. C. Carrier, brother of the editor of the Frankfort Express, has purchased an interest in that paper, adding his experience to the past excellent management.

Gov. Cleveland signed five and vetoed but one of the six bills urged by the New York State Trades Assembly, and that body of workingmen will give him their support.

We have now in this state two prohibition parties, the union and the republican. The first is genuine, with backbones and well defined principles. The second is a sort of eunuch fiddle affair, angling for votes with a hook baited with broken promises.—Jackson Patriot.

More than a dozen good republicans have said to us since last week that we have the winning state ticket, and not a few have signified their intention of quietly supporting that ticket. We would like to give their names if it would not subject them to an unmerciful party lashing from their former political friends.

The new Post—oh, so new!—frankly tells the prohibitionists that the submission pledge of the republican convention does not amount to anything—as if any of them were gullible enough to suppose it did. "The state convention," it tells them, "cannot bind the local constituencies on the submission question," nor of course is possible to have a republican majority without a submission majority." Verry true, Sammy. But wherefore, then, the submission plank? Was it a little scheme of Alger's to catch the prohibition vote in the convention, and does his conscience smite him and make him tell the voters through his paper that there is nothing in it? Or does he hope to catch the liquor dealers' vote by telling them that the plank is a barren ideality?—Free Press.

Number 2 of the Wexford County Citizen is just at hand. Typographically, it is a clean six column quarto well filled with local news matter. There are indications, also, of a newspaper war with the older journals, which promise richness. It is evidently the organ of the independents of that county, who have nominated a county ticket.

A peculiar surprise developed in Syracuse Tuesday when over 100 republicans bolted and declared for Cleveland. It was learned that the bolt was caused by the republican county committee circulating the Buffalo newspaper containing the Cleveland scandal as a campaign document. Four of the bolters have hitherto been very active in the republican interests.—E. R. Times.

To those who expected of Gov. Cleveland an elaborate presentation of his views on all public questions his letter will be a disappointment but to the greater number who expected a simple, straightforward and concise statement of a fellow citizen placed before the public in the position of a candidate for the exalted position of president of the United States, his letter will fill the bill.—Saginaw Courier.

The re-nomination of Gov. Begole was a deserved compliment to one of the most honest, patriotic and faithful of the chief executives that have presided over the affairs of the state. His plain, democratic manners, unquestioned integrity and splendid administrative judgment, have endeared him to the hearts of the people, and they will give him an overwhelming majority next November. Mathew H. Maynard, the nominee for lieutenant governor, is one of the best known and popular citizens of Marquette. He is a gentleman of acknowledged high character and ability, and his name will greatly strengthen the ticket in the upper peninsula. For secretary of state, William Shakespeare, of Kalamazoo, was nominated. He is the present quartermaster-general of the state, and his splendid record he has made in that office, together with his deserved popularity among the old soldiers of the state, will make him a most formidable candidate. James Blair, an old, respected and influential citizen of Grand Rapids, was nominated for state treasurer. Under his administration the finances of the state will be honestly and ably managed.—Lansing Journal.

There is a sharp contrast between general Butler's treatment of the labor question and that accorded it by Mr. Blaine. Indeed, that portion of the letter of the former seems to have been penned with especial reference to the utterances of the latter. Mr. Blaine spoke of the rich rewards which labor received in this country, and intimated that any frugal man could readily, from his savings, acquire a home for himself. Gen. Butler says: "Laboring men are out of employment and starving, after a quarter of a century of republican rule. * * We have in this country, even in its youth, almost infancy as regards the life of nations, richer men than in any other country in the world, and as poor men as any other country in the world, however enslaved that country may be, for a man cannot be poorer than starvation." General Butler's forcible presentation of the condition of the workingmen and working women of the United States is a strong argument against the industrial policy which has been pursued by the republican party, and it shows that the so-called "protective" system, which is the pride and boast of the republicans, has built up monopolies and crushed and impoverished labor.—Free Press.

One for St. John.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—I see by the Sentinel that "there is not a prohibitionist in Charlevoix that will not vote for Blaine or Cleveland, and as most of them are republican prohibitionists," takes great comfort in the thought. The writer of that paragraph is just a little off his base, I know of several men in Charlevoix who will vote for St. John and Daniel, and as to his republican prohibitionists they would be more of a curiosity than the St. John and Daniel streamer at Boyne City. OLD BLOCK.

VILE SLANDERS REFUTED.

Searching Investigations of the Buffalo Scandals Prove Them False.

The Mouthings of Obscene Slanderers Met by a Plain Statement of Facts.

[Buffalo special.]

The Independent Republicans of this city have made an official report to the National Committee, after an investigation of the charges against Gov. Cleveland. The report, which is as follows, has been adopted by the National Independent Committee:

To the Independent Republicans of the Nation:

As Republicans and Independents residing in Buffalo, and having personal means of knowledge, we have been called upon in by private letters and otherwise for information in regard to the scandals which have been put in circulation respecting Gov. Cleveland's private life. We have felt it to be a duty, imposed on us by circumstances, to examine these stories in detail and to make a formal statement of the results. No such examination would have been necessary to satisfy ourselves, but it was due to those who have read the charges against Gov. Cleveland without knowing personally his general character and reputation in this community, and without knowing either the portion or the mode of introduction of those who have made the charges, that we should not put forth a hasty general statement without previous investigation. We have, therefore, through a committee appointed from our number for that purpose, carefully and deliberately made such an investigation, as we have been every available means to ascertain the precise facts in each case.

The general charges of drunkenness and gross immorality which are made against Gov. Cleveland are absolutely false. His reputation for sobriety has always been good. There is no foundation for any statement to the contrary. He was chosen Sheriff and nominated by the Democratic party against his will, and was supported for that office by the larger portion of the intelligent and influential citizens of Buffalo, without regard to politics. Through personal acquaintance, and through his official position, he was again put forward by the Democratic party as its candidate for Mayor, and again received the support of the same class of the best citizens of this community, where he had lived for twenty-nine years, and where his life was known and his character understood.

This support would not have been given to him had he been a man habitually drunken or a libertine. We are able to speak from personal knowledge as his acquaintances of long standing, and to say that his general character has been that of a quiet, orderly, self-respecting, and generally respected citizen.

Since he assumed his present office his visits to Buffalo have been few and short in duration. It is unsupposable, absolute proof and has been proven to us that upon no one of the several occasions that have been made by his detractors. The charge that he has recently taken part in a drunken and licentious debauch in Buffalo on the occasion of such a visit is entirely false.

We have been particularly careful and thorough in our investigations of the alleged betrayal, seduction, and miserable treatment of a woman at this city as detailed in a local newspaper.

The circumstances out of which this story was fabricated were of a very painful character. The woman in question was of that times whose between 30 and 40 years of age, with a child like the younger of whom was 10 years old. The facts of the case were limited to the above, and that the allegations respecting her association with Gov. Cleveland were entirely false. We deem those the only features of the charge in connection with this matter which constitute a public question requiring any declaration on our part.

Our second action of the other charges which have been made against Gov. Cleveland's private character stand on a different footing. In almost every instance in which the report and investigation have reached private friends in Buffalo we believe it safe to say that in our opinion the charges have been positively disproved.

The attack on Gov. Cleveland's character is the roughly discredited, when we consider the sources from which it comes. It was first publicly made in Buffalo by a newspaper of no standing whatever. We have twice sold it upon the streets of this paper and asked him to give those his proofs, the names, the dates, and other particulars which he stated he had in his possession. He declined to do so or to furnish any evidence in truth or either his own charges or those contained in the anonymous letter which he published. He furnished no evidence whatever to support any statement against Mr. Cleveland, except a letter of Mr. Beecher's, which we have particularly referred, where he is entirely contradicted by the witness having personal knowledge.

The next charge which the profession has been invoked to give weight to the foregoing charges is personal knowledge of the facts and under the circumstances could not possibly have such knowledge. They have sought to state as facts known to themselves, stories, which are based upon the rumor of hearsay, and which should be by the alleged sources are in every case denied by the persons to whom they are ascribed. We have declined to make a candid and judicial statement of the results of our investigations which matter without publication nothing. We have not thought it necessary or proper to report the charges against Gov. cleveland in detail, nor to present in full the evidence by which they have been disproved.

Gov. Cleveland's Conduct Singularly Honorable.

The Independent new-paper, of New York, the great organ of the Congregationalists, prints a lengthy report of the proceedings during part of the scandal, made by the Rev. Dr. Quigley, Pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. It is not the purpose here to report the pastor, therefore the report presented below is offered for its corrected version. If necessary I can push with the facts, but it is not necessary here. The kernel of truth in the various charges against Cleveland is this: When he was the younger than he is now he was guilty or at illicit connection, but the charge is brought against him has in the elements of truth in those indictment and perfect. The lady in question is not a mistress, no harlot or prostitute, no disgraceful character but like the rest of us she has a miserable irregularity of life. Living as he was and is, a bachelor, the social pride and power is proper but he should suffer. Instead of following the line of social duty he followed his own inclination, which I write his accuser was simply a seduction. Cleveland is strong enough to own his guilty and doing all he could to meet the difficulty. He did not do nothing; certainly was not. Everything here we can add to his credit, considering the circumstances which surrounded it, to our mind he could to justify him in other quarters than that which he accepts as his duty. There was much out of which proper legal action in different courses may have been demanded it.

The woman the worse and damning charges of gross infidelities and drunkenness. I say, distinctly, after abundant inquiry, that they are false. They are, I believe, the product of the imaginations of the slums. Every attempt to trace them to their lair, the source grows in saloons and brothels. On the other hand, my inquiry of the noblest Christian men in the city—especially in the legal profession—men knew all the parties who will vote for Cleveland men who will vote and speak against him for all that I can learn—men who know Cleveland most intimately, who have been partners in business or his nearest neighbors, men who know him by day and by night, bring the unanimous reply that it is utterly impossible that on such reputation as he has. It has been of a true and kind heart, generous and open handed even to his business duties that it is impossible that he should be a debauchee. Before the honest respect of the best families in this city he stands as a man of honor, and there is no social out of the society to which he would be welcome.

There are some severe prejudices against Mr. Cleveland in Buffalo. They have their chief seat in the saloon element, against whose tyranny his election to the mayoralty was the protest of good citizens of both parties. They have not forgiven him for their defeat. From the best sources of information I received testimony of the strongest character that Cleveland is a horse ruler of men, of the greatest independence and honesty of character; a man who believes in reform to the bottom of his soul, and has the independence to carry it out, and a man on whom the responsibilities of office have rested with a serious and solemn weight.

This investigation I made absolutely thorough. I depended on no reports or the newspapers, nor of local clergymen or others, but only on my own personal investigation of the cases. I am satisfied that I know the case from fuller information than do any of those who have given it private or public currency.

Gov. Cleveland's Own Version of the Scandal.

[Brooklyn special.]

Gen. Horatio King, whose report of what he learned in Buffalo led Mr. Beecher to return to Governor Cleveland's support, said to a reporter to-day: "After leaving Buffalo I went to Albany and saw Governor Cleveland. He frankly told me that my version of the matter was substantially correct, adding: 'I stand throughout as any honorable man should.' I asked him if he had committed, in kind, a wrong. He said: 'Many years ago, when the Governor was a young man and I was, he met this woman and became intimate with her. She was a widow, and in a good many by the bonds of public ethics. She learning this, made inquiries, and found that several of his friends had also been intimate with her. When a child was born, Cleveland, to shield his friends, was persuaded to and assumed the responsibility of it and took care of the child and mother until the woman became a confirmed victim to drink, and her conduct made it impossible to have anything to do with her. He never separated mother and child, nor did assist to injure her. He said it was the circumstances, as near as I can recollect, that not one in a thousand has shielded, and acted honorably. The other stories against him could not be substantiated, and no one willing to father them could be found."

William Purcell Retracts.

[Rochester (N. Y.) dispatch.]

William Purcell, who has temporarily withdrawn from the editorship of the Union and Advertiser, publishes in that paper the following letter, addressed to "A Changed Chairman of Faces": "Two days after the appearance of the Democratic platform in the morning papers I headed 'A Terrible Tale,' in conversation with a representative of the New York Sun. I remarked that, upon the then existing state of facts, Gov. Cleveland must be considered a moral leper. The conclusion without the premise was perfect, and has since been extensively copied. I now desire to say that information has come to me, from a source in which I place explicit confidence, materially changing the statement of facts upon which the article was made. Hence, in justice to Gov. Cleveland, myself, and to all others whom it may concern, I withdraw the characterization, and request that it may not be used or attributed to me."

Moore, when Gen. Keifer excelled stumbling and to kidnap and imprison him on the charge of "forgery." Gen. King was unable to bring home such a witness against some of Cleveland's friends which could be presented to Grand Jurors in this District for investigation, and therefore he was not examined. Gen. King's testimony, unless it be to state as facts known to himself, rests upon the rumor of hearsay, and which should not be by the alleged sources are in every case denied by the persons to whom they are ascribed. Platform of the Holding German Republican Union of Illinois.

Sixty-five leading Germans of Illinois were in consultation at the Briggs House, Saturday, in relation to organize in the interests of the Democratic national and state tickets. Gen. Lieb called the meeting to order, and explained its object. Hedwig Reinwald was elected secretary. Mr. Speed was delivered in the English language. He argued against the Republican party for its prohibition tendencies. This, he declared, was a question of personal liberty, and he called upon all to take a stand against that party. Upon the suggestion of Augusta Bellman, the permanent number of the proceedings were conducted in German.

All but two of these were performed, and the following German populations sending several delegates, after which the meeting adjourned: Democratic German Republican German, and, judging from the enthusiasm of the meeting, it is safe to say the Teutons are all heading toward Democracy.

It declared that the Democratic party was not responsible for the late war, but that it had always been the friend of the German citizen. DEFENDING THE IRISH.

An Incident of the Fenian Raid—Grover Cleveland Appears as Counsel for the Patriotic Prisoners and Defends Them Without Pay.

Among the delegates to the National Democratic Convention a few weeks ago was Col. O Donahue, of New York, a member of the Legislature, and one of the most able and accomplished men of Congressman Flaherty, of Buffalo. As a result of the convention, in pointing up the Representative of the Second Erie District, he found him one evening at the meeting of the Irish-American Club in company with William Dorsey, T. P. O'Connor, Michael Kelley, John Devoy, and a Mr. Kennedy, a noticed Irishman formerly a resident of New York, but now living in Chicago.

The conversation at the last time we were together," asked Capt. O'Donahue of Flaherty.

The latter gentleman nodded an affirmative.

Then Capt. O'Donahue related to the party the story of the Fenians' raid of 1866 into Canada by a few zealous young Fenians, whose impetuous agitations had been fired with the belief that they would strike terror to the heart of the mother country by this invasion of Canada, and how the United States government had and thereby checked a naval vessel to the transport on which they were crossing the Niagara River into the English dominions and town them in this port as prisoners.

"Do you remember the morning," continued Captain O'Donahue, "when you and I, with the others, stood before the bar of a Criminal Court in Buffalo, without a friend counsel to defend us? We were a sorry lot, a rash band of young men reading under a great charge. While in this friendless and helpless condition, do you remember the young man, an obscure lawyer at the time, who stepped up and volunteered his services in our defense? He defended us persistently and consistently and successfully. When we afterward raised a purse and presented it to him, he refused to accept it, saying that he was glad to serve us, unfortunately situated as we were, without reward. That man was Grover Cleveland, the friend now nominated by the convention for President of the United States."

BLAINE IN THE DUMPS.

The New York Sun's Washington Correspondent Says the Plumed Knight Is Down in the Mouth.

Deserted by His Old-Time Vigor, and Disheartening His Friends by His Gloom Over the Prospects of the Canvass.

[New York telegram.]

A special from Washington to the Sun paints a gloomy picture of Mr. Blaine's mental condition and effect upon the canvass. It says:

Blaine is canvassing those who are managing his campaign as little anxious as any manager the dashing and audacious plumed knight of 1884. He is changed men. Though always the most cautious and secretive of men, he used to somewhat trust his friends with his wish and plans that was a most set advice as well as keenest piece of acting. Now, however, his friends find that this brilliant eager observer has become the most unconfiding and reserved individual. If he has any great interest in the campaign he does not show it, and he simply urges his friends to go on with the canvass in their own way and let him be at peace so far as possible. That was not at all what the managers of Logan and Hendricks believed when they procured his nomination. They looked for an abundance of brilliant suggestions and the proposition of something new in the mechanical line for use in carrying on the canvass from the candidate, but the statement that, secretly despondent, he is unable. Hence, in justice to Gov. Cleveland, myself, and to all others whom it may concern, I withdraw the characterization, and request that it may not be used or attributed to me."

It declared that the late war was not responsible for the late war, but that it had always been the friend of the German citizen. It declared that the Republican party had come into power by the grossest corruption, and that it was now using the money which it had stolen from the people to debauch the voters. It declared that the Democratic party was the party of reform, and that it was the party of economy. It declared that the Democratic party was the party of peace, and that it was the party of prosperity. It declared that the Democratic party was the party of liberty, and that it was the party of the people. Great Sail Lift

The fame of this large [illegible] ions and extremely [illegible] trated southward to the [illegible] Northwest get near enough [illegible] ury ago to hear of its [illegible] peculiarities. It is [illegible] love, in maps and [illegible] the last century as [illegible] maps of twenty years [illegible] lakes of Central Africa [illegible] positions. When the [illegible] its campaigns began [illegible] Rocky Mountains, [illegible] and the bountiful valleys of the [illegible] ern Wahsatch. Jungle fanatics [illegible] whom we can select [illegible] the future of our country. The sites of Colfax, Delano, Belknap, Robeson, and Williams, and the Sanborn contracts, the whisky ring, and the star-route frauds are recalled, and refer us to make to the frauds in the Signal Service, the Treasury Department, and in other branches of the public support. The support of Mahone by the Republican party is also pointed out in the pending indictment. Then, in reference to the future, the issues continues. The candidate of the Republican party for President is a man charged with the basest of public crimes. He has used official power for his own pecuniary advantage when he got power has never given it up, and may still invest gains of the charges which he has been charged in the public record, and to which alone those charges can be met in any evidence adequate to the issue. We believe this country, and we know that many of the prominent men in the anti-Democratic party will not support the nomination of a candidate so odious. The following resolutions as follows: "By the nomination of James G. Blaine the Republican party has thrown down the gauntlet of contempt and defiance to the moral sentiment of the country, and has made a challenge. Its candidate is the acknowledged champion of reform and political honesty. The issue is thus joined. The leaders are representative men. The foremost citizen of this land, save one for an instant hesitate in our choice, or if until what the true interests of our country demand. We do not slur ourselves with the Democratic party, still less sensitive or approve its past, but its present candidate has proved his fidelity to the principles we avow, and in the coming election he commands, and will receive, our support."

WORKINGMEN AND CLEVELAND.

The Butlers' Thanks Engrossed on Vellum and Sent to the Governor.

[New York World.]

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the United Bal Painters Association of America, a series of resolutions were unanimously adopted expressing the regard of the members of the Association for Cleveland as a labor-friend. The resolutions were as follows:

WHEREAS, Grover Cleveland has been a steadfast friend of organized labor and other bodies of mechanics, for several years he has used all their efforts to secure to them the greatest benefits, and in the face of the injustices which have been heaped upon him, which entitled him to the highest honors and success, thus reducing the battling and obstinacy shes sweeping down on every side, and

WHEREAS, Grover Cleveland has been a friend of the laboring man in every sense of the word, and has ever been ready to lend his influence to the cause of labor

Around the County.

South Arm.

Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, of Jordan, visited at Rev. H. C. Scofield's recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Hardy, of Banks, rejoice in the possession of a young son.

Wheat harvest is now in progress. The prospect is quite flattering for an abundant crop.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Murphy attended the G. A. R. picnic at Horton's bay last Wednesday.

Mrs. T. F. Nelson, of East Jordan, and Miss Annie Bugbee, of Norwood, were guests of Mrs. J. R. Vance, on Thursday last.

Supervisor Warner and wife, of Warner township, and Mr. and Mrs. Buckly, of Jordan, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. McArthurs recently.

Miss Hattie May, daughter of Rev. S. May, of this place, has returned home after a few months attendance at the Normal school at Valparaiso.

Mr. John McCammins of Durham, Ont., while visiting his son Samuel here, called on his old friend Mr. H. Vance, of Echo.

Mrs. Wm. Reaun and family, living in Indiana, were at her father's, Mr. A. Hawks, last week, but have now gone to Banks to visit relatives there.

Rev. J. M. Smith and wife, also mother and sister are guests of James Bennett. Mrs. Smith, Sen., and daughter, expect soon to remove to Kansas.

A few of the South Arm people attended church in East Jordan on Sunday evening and listened to an able discourse by Elder Smith, formerly M. E. pastor here.

Our Sunday school picnic on Wednesday was well attended and everything passed off pleasantly. Free lemonade and splendid dinner were among the pleasant features of the occasion.

Mrs. J. R. Vance and children spent two days in Echo, and Mrs. Rae and children went to Intermediate last week, all in quest of blackberries which are quite abundant in some places.

Quite a number of the Sunday school people patronized the excursion on Sunday last. The school house key not being found there were no services held. This is more to be regretted for it was older Blake's last appointment.

Tramps made a raid on H. C. Scofield's hen roost one night not long ago. They captured four fowls and thinking "praties" would taste well with their soup, dug and carried off about two bushels. A similar proceeding was enacted at elder May's last week, the loss being ten chickens.

There is in Milwaukee one saloon for every twenty-six voters; and as half the people do not drink, every thirteen drunkards must support the one saloon. How many women take in washing to support the thirteen drunkards who support each saloon? —Milwaukee Prohibitionist.

The burning of the Methodist churches in Wichita and Cawker city by the whiskyites will do the prohibition cause no harm, but much good. In the light of those burning buildings many people will be able to see the true character of the liquor traffic as they never saw it before.—Ex.

A Georgia correspondent of the Vermont Messenger says: "The effect in the prohibition counties has been startling. Labor has been improved 100 per cent and the condition of the laborers 1,000 per cent. Men who never worked but part of a week now put in six good days, and those who spent their entire wages at the saloons, leaving their wives and children to sh ft for themselves, are now saving money and looking forward hopefully to the time when they shall own lands for themselves. The prohibition of the sale of liquor in these counties is the proudest thing Georgia has ever done. The remaining forty-two will follow their example ere long. The prohibition counties have demonstrated the possibility of driving out the stuff, and the good that has followed will induce the others to follow suit."

Diving For Sea-Eggs.

The "sea-eggs" are a species of the family Echinida. Diving for them by the Fuegian women is one of their most painful and dangerous ways of procuring food, as they often have to follow it when the sea is rough, and in coldest weather. The following description is taken from Mayne Reid's serial, "The Land of Fire," in the April St. Nicholas:

"The savages do not long remain idle, another resource engaging them—a feast for which the Fuegian native has obtained a world-wide celebrity—namely, diving for sea-eggs. A difficult, dangerous industry it is, and just on this account committed to the women, who alone engage in it.

"Having dispatched their poor breakfast, half a dozen of the younger and stronger women take to the canoes,—two in each,—and paddle out to where they hope to find the sea-urchins.

"Arriving there, she who is to do the diving prepares for it by attaching a little wicker-basket to her hip, her companion being intrusted to keep the canoe in place, a task which is no easy one in water so rough as that of the sea-arm chances to be now.

"Everything ready, the diver drops over, head foremost, as fearlessly as would a water-spaniel, and is out of sight for two or three minutes; then the crow-black head is seen bobbing up again, and swimming back to the canoe with a hand-over-hand stroke, dog-fashion, the egg-gatherer lays hold of the rail to rest herself, while she gives up the contents of her basket.

"Diving remained above water just long enough to recover breath, down she goes a second time, to stay under for minutes, as before. And this performance is repeated again and again, till at length, utterly exhausted, she climbs back into the canoe, and the other ties on the basket and takes her turn at diving.

"Thus, for hours, the sub-marine egg-gatherers continue at their arduous, perilous task; and, having finished it, they come paddling back to the shore.

"And on landing, they make straight for the wig-wams, and seat themselves by a fire,—almost in it,—leaving the spoil to be brought up by others."

Krupp's Big Hammer.

The great fifty-ton hammer in Krupp's works at Essen gained its name, "Uaser Fritz," and the inscription it bears, "Fritz, let fly!" in the following manner: When, in 1877, the Emperor William visited Essen, this steam hammer attracted his attention. Krupp presented to him the machinist, Fritz, who, he said, handled the hammer with such nicety and precision as not to injure or touch an object placed in the center of the block. The emperor at once put his diamond-studded watch on the spot indicated, and beckoned to the machinist to set the hammer in motion. Fritz hesitated out of consideration for the precious object, but Krupp urged him on by saying, "Fritz, let fly!" Down came the hammer, and the watch remained untouched. The Emperor gave to the machinist as a souvenir, and Krupp added 1,000 marks to the present.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Abbott Kiss.

I saw the Abbott kiss on Monday night at the Baldwin. I had a good view of it. It will never do. I can give a superior article myself if I get as good a chance. The absolute truth is that Castle's perihelion during the osculation was at least an inch and a half from Abbott's lips. Now, I submit it to any girl, is that a kiss? Would she make so much fuss, get a fellow so close to her as that and remain where she was? I submit it to any man—the older the better—if he got as close to a woman's lips, would he stop there? No, most certainly not. The Abbott kiss is a failure. All in favor of the motion say aye. Aye! All to the contrary say no. The ayes have it —motion to adjourn.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Annual School Meeting.

The annual school meeting for this district was held at the school house, last Monday evening, about 40 taxpayers being present. Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, also the reports of receipts and expenditures, and estimates for the coming year.

The receipts and expenditures of the year were as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Money on hand Sept. 3, 1883	$755 26
Received from one-mill tax	393 70
Received from primary school interest fund	432 20
Received from tuition of non-resident pupils	4 75
Received from district taxes for all purposes	710 00
Received from all other sources	3 00
Total	$2,296 91

EXPENDITURES.

Paid male teachers	$709 00
Paid female teachers	926 56
Paid for all other purposes	305 39
Amount on hand Sept. 1, 1884	304 17
Total	$2,296 92

Estimates for the coming year were made and amounts voted as follows:

For teachers wages	$1,600 00
For wood	85 00
For janitor	75 00
For incidentals	50 00
Total	$1,710 00

Ten dollars was also voted as compensation to the director.

It was voted to have nine months school.

The matter of warming the building was discussed at length, and the board was finally instructed to procure a furnace, make the necessary excavations, chimneys, and ventilators and put the same in use as soon as possible, the work of putting in to be paid for from any money now on hand not otherwise appropriated. It was understood that a furnace from the company who are putting one into the new Congregational church would not have to be paid for until next spring after it had been given a fair trial. Removing the stoves will give space for three additional seats in each room, thus increasing the capacity as well as the comfort of the building.

For the office of moderator, E. Carpenter was elected his own successor, receiving on the first formal ballot 24 of the 37 votes cast.

Building Notes.

The McCabe boys are building a new barn on the lot east of their residence on Mason street.

Mr. Wilcox has sold his cottage near the music hall to Mr. Miley, of Terre Haute, Ind., who will occupy it with his family next season.

J. L. Sebring has moved his cottage on the upper terrace to the lot adjoining the music hall, and offers it for sale. This is done to enable him to build a cottage worthy of the old site.

J. T. Kirkpatrick has the frames up for two new cottages on the Chicago resort,—one for N. H. Blatchford, and one for John P. Wilson. Mr. K. has also the contract for a cottage for R. G. Bogue.

C. V. Cook and wife are about to occupy as fine finished a house as there is in Charlevoix. The visitor enters a broad hall, to the left of which is a private parlor and bedroom. On the right is the main parlor, or, as Mr. Cook says, "the living room." From this room one has an unobstructed view of the whole of Round Lake, and nearly the whole business portion of Charlevoix. The bay window is a most noticeable part of the room, and is very pretty as well as convenient. In the rear of this room is the dining room, and still further the pantry, kitchen, and wood shed. The pantry and kitchen are well furnished with shelves, cupboards, sinks, water, etc., and arranged with a view to convenience and saving of labor. Returning to the hall, before ascending, we examine the stairs and find a very creditable job of work. The steps are birch, and the trimmings and ornaments of birds-eye maple polished. The timber for this, as well as the entire finishing of the house was selected by Mr. Cook, cut and sawed to order, kiln-dried, and is but another proof of the beauty and value of our native woods for finishing purposes. The mouldings, trimmings, and ornaments around the windows and doors are entirely of ash, in Eastlake patterns, highly polished, and very handsome. Some very fine effects in natural graining can be found in every room. In the chamber are six rooms, finished in the same style as below, and arranged for the convenience and comfort of summer boarders. There is a rear stairway for use of help and ease of escape in case of fire. Above this floor is a commodious attic, high enough for storing a quantity of unused furniture, or setting up extra cots for sleeping, in case of a crowd. There is a cellar under the whole, in which will be placed a large furnace. It is capable of holding a large amount of wood as well as storage for fruit and vegetables. The well is under cover and furnishes pure cold water. The cistern pump is in the kitchen, and the dry-earth closet can be reached without stepping out doors. The wood-work for this residence has been entirely under the management of Messrs. Wheat and Carr, and the finishing by their hands. The mason work and plastering is by Messrs. Lamoreaux, Myers, and Cook. The whole is a structure adding much to the material wealth and beauty of Charlevoix.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BOSTON dispatch says the United States steamer Tallapoosa, the celebrated craft that has for years been employed as a freighter for naval stores in winter and as a pleasure yacht for the Secretary in summer, came to an untimely end in Vineland Sound, bringing tribute by a coal schooner and sank. The ship was on her way from Boston to Newport when the disaster occurred, and had on board some of the personal effects of the Secretary and Mrs. Chandler, who were to have rejoined here at the latter point. The night was clear, and a good many vessels were in the sound. The vessel which struck the Tallapoosa was the schooner James S. Lowell, of Bath, Me., from Baltimore for Portland. She is a large three-master, and was loaded with 800 tons of coal. The Tallapoosa was struck on the starboard bow and went down within five minutes. The officers and crew, numbering about 100 persons, were saved from the wreck by the schooner, all being accounted for except the following: Surgeon Black, William O'Donnell, of Boston, a seaman; William Johns, of Washington, a landsman; George Proctor, a colored saloon boy; ——Foster, a colored servant.

ELEVEN persons sustained serious injuries by an accident on the New York and New England Road, near Quinebaug, Connecticut. A passenger car and a smoker were thrown down an embankment of twenty feet. H. W. Phelps, of Hyde Park, Massachusetts, received what may prove a fatal cut on the right temple. Silver has been discovered near Ritchie, W. Va., and prospectors are flocking to the mine. The last assay of one mine showed $300 of silver and $11 of lead to the ton. ... An assignment to secure liabilities of $25,000 has been made by the Hudson River Company of Fayette County, Pennsylvania.

THE schedules in the assignment of Hatch & Foote, the New York bankers, who recently failed, have been made public. They show the liabilities to be $4,057,000, of which $3,548,000 are secured. The actual assets are $228,871, about one-fourth of the nominal assets. . . . The Sinking Fund Commissioners of Essex County, New Jersey, are shown to be short $800,000 in their accounts, and proceedings to recover the amount will be at once commenced. . . . The late heavy frosts in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut, and crops are damaged in many places.

SOME citizens of Trenton, N. J., who fear cremation, have purchased a pottery. Into it Trenton, and will transform it into an oven for burning bodies. . . . The Rev. John W. Stuart, of the Bloomfield Catholic Church, Pittsburg, while crazed with disease, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver.

ON the Chester oak track at Hartford, while the peers Princess and George G. were being exercised in different directions for the 2:17 race, both drivers pulled the same way, the animals went into the air and fell flat. George G. died almost instantly, and was buried in view of the assemblage. Princess received fatal injuries. The horses were valued at $5,000 each.

THE year's hop crop in this country is estimated to be about one-fourth short of the average.

THE WEST.

DENMAN THOMPSON, in his unrivalled character of Joshua Whitcomb, the good-natured, good-hearted New England farmer, is making a regular annual tour of the West, and occupies the boards of McVicker's Theater, in Chicago, this week. For many years everybody in the town, attached his wife with a pair of shears and subdued her five times. She died to death in ten minutes. . . . Pollock, Wilson & Co., established in 1848 and Carr streets, Cincinnati, for the manufacture of saddlery hardware and chains, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $50,000.

Perrin, a wholesale grocer of St. Joseph, Mo., with liabilities of $75,000, has closed his store.

MCCRAY GRIFFEY of De Moine, Iowa, who was fined $100 and costs, to be committed to jail until paid, was brought into court on a writ of habeas corpus, claiming that the Justice which fined him was only thirty days, and that he had no jurisdiction. THE Treasury Department has issued orders to Collectors of Customs that hereafter when a vessel carrying rags arrives at any port it shall be the duty of the inspector to produce positive evidence that the rags be from a non-infected port, and is free from the germs of disease. He weighed 138 pounds, and his body had to be placed in a grape arbor until a coffin could be made.

THE gold reserve in the Treasury has increased to $120,000,000. . . . Judge George C. Lyon, of the Federal Court of Mississippi, died at Washington last week.

A resolution was adopted declaring it to be for the best interests of the party not to make either nominations for State offices, leaving the matter to the Central Committee. The action of the convention is interpreted as meaning fusion with the Republicans, leaving out the Democrats, by the nomination of the remainder of the State ticket.

AT a temperance camp meeting in a grove near Cuba, N. Y., St. John and Daniel Rochford made speeches, the former speaking for President and Vice President by the Prohibitionists. Breidenthal; Chief Justice, H. P. Vrooman; Associate, J. D. McIlvain; Treasurer, H. E. Heffelbourn; Auditor, W. T. Wakefield; Attorney General, H. L. Brush, Secretary of State, J. C. A DISPATCH from Foo-Chow states that the French resumed hostilities and the attacks on the forts on the Min River, between its mouth and the arsenal, at an early hour on the morning of Aug. 28. The forts at the Kimpai Pass offered a determined resistance, but the superiority of the French gunners soon began to tell on the works. Gun after gun was dismounted, until finally the Chinese became demoralized at the sight of the destruction going on and fled from the fortresses, leaving everything behind them. Admiral Courbet then directed his attack on the forts higher up the river and made short work of them, as the garrisons had become quite sick of it at the sight and fire of the fleet, and had already abandoned the defenses, leaving the French masters of the whole line of fortifications on the Min River up to the arsenal. When the French had descended the river after the attack on the forts the Chinese opened fire and burned the foreign quarter.

A JURY in the Cook County Probate Court at Chicago, after listening to the medical and other testimony produced regarding Mr. Wilbur F. Storey, proprietor of the Chicago Times, pronounced that gentleman insane. The court appointed Mr. Austin L. S. W. TALLMADGE, the crop statistician of Milwaukee, has issued his final estimate of the wheat crop of the United States for 1883, as follows: Winter wheat, 280,000,000 bushels; spring wheat, 150,000,000, or 430,000,000 bushels more than the crop of 1882. . . . A Prohibition mass meeting, lasting two days, is in progress at the camp ground, a grove two miles from this village, the principal leaders and speakers of the Prohibition movement in the State in attendance. This evening opened with song and prayer, after which Prof. Isaac Newman of the Northwestern Christian University delivered the address of welcome, to which Gen. Neal Dow responded in a few words, and then introduced Hon. John P. St. John, the Prohibition candidate for President, who was received with great applause. He said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I am to speak for the first time in my life to-day in the interest of the Prohibition party. I am not a professional speaker, and in keeping with the character of the Irish people, all voters are expected to vote, but not to speak. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, in these days of political campaigns, and in keeping with the custom of the times, I shall endeavor to place you, your children and your country under obligations to me by a brief address. [Laughter.] I am not a politician in the sense that I am a candidate of the political parties for any office, but I am a politician in the sense that I am a citizen of the United States, and I am a member of the Prohibition party, and I am a candidate of the Prohibition party for the office of President of the United States, and Pay or Quit.

The finance committee of the g. o. p. is in straitened circumstances. Voluntary contributions are not large enough to assure Blaine's success, and they resort to force to make up the deficiency. The New York Post of Aug. 28 says that "government officials connected with the geological survey have received the following extraordinary document:

HEADQUARTERS UNION REPUBLICAN CLUB,
NEW YORK, August 25, 1884.

DEAR SIR: As we have not had the pleasure of hearing from you we are confident you are not over interested in the success of the grand old republican party, and can only be considered as a backer of the government, and as further silence on your part will be understood as equivalent to an expressed wish to resign your membership on Union Square Club, we shall look for a satisfactory explanation, if any for the committee.

Yours respectfully,
GREEN B. RAUM.

The gentleman who received this grove is a strong Blaine republican, and writes that up to the time of receiving this he "had intended forwarding a voluntary contribution of $100 for republican funds, but this shuts me up. I never yet did anything under threats."

Notes and News.

Republican farmers who feel like kicking because Mr. Lincoln was not nominated at the republican state convention, may find consolation in voting for farmer Begole.—Enterprise.

After twenty-four years of uninterrupted power to make any and all laws that it pleased, the republican party at its recent state convention declares that the republican party is tested by a Democratic firm to all republicans the need of more efficient laws to protect the rights of the laboring man and the state in obtaining the just reward for their labor, and it will do it or high priced furnaces must go out out of blast. The Louisville Courier Journal very pointedly remarks in regard to, we might say, this infernal scheme of internal protection: "Here is an empirical remedy for a constitutional disease. Here is the principle of destruction urged as a means of protecting an infant industry. Here is proposed a method of starvation in order to restore the vital energies of the people."—Elk Rapids Progress.

Abigail Adams.

Abigail Adams, the president's wife, was undoubtedly the most conspicuous American woman of her day, whether by position or by character. When writing to her husband she often signed herself "Portia," in accordance with a stately, and perhaps high-flown, habit of the period, and she certainly showed qualities which would have done honor to either the Roman or Shakspearean heroine of that name. In her letters we see her thoroughly revealed. While the battle of Bunker Hill was in progress, she wrote that it "was dreadful but glorious;" and in the depression of the battle of Long Island, she said: "If all America is to be ruined and undone by a pack of cowards and knaves, I wish to know it," and added, "Don't you know me better than to think me a coward?" When, first among American women, she represented her nation at the court of St. James, she met with equal pride the contemptuous demeanor of Queen Charlotte, and when her husband was chosen president, she wrote to him, "My feelings are not those of pride or ostentation upon the occasion; they are solemnized by a sense of the obligations, the important truths and numerous duties connected with it." When, finally, after four years, he failed of re-election, she wrote to her son: "The consequence to us is personally that we retire from public life. For myself and family I have few regrets. * * * If I do not rise with dignity, I can at least fall with ease." This was Abigail Adams. In person she was distinguished and noble rather than beautiful; yet it is satisfactory to know that when she was first presented at the British court she wore a white lute-string, trimmed with white crepe, festooned with lilac ribbon and mock-point lace over a hoop of enormous extent, with a narrow train three yards long, looped up by a ribbon. She wore treble lace ruffles a dress cap with long lace lappets and three white plumes, these last doubtless soaring strangely in the air above her head in the extraordinary style fashionable to us in Gilfray's caricatures of that period.

It was in those days no very agreeable task to be the wife of the president. Mrs. Adams has left on record a graphic sketch of the White house, where she presided for three months. The dining, the entertainment had been decided upon for twelve years, yet the building was still a vast unfinished barrack, with few rooms plastered, no main stairway, not a bell within, not a fence without; it was distressingly cold in winter, while the chief magistrate of the United States could not obtain for love or money a man to cut wood for him in the forests which then surrounded Washington. From Washington to Baltimore extended what Mrs. Adams terms "a forest of timber, varied only by some small and windowless huts. There could as yet be in Washington no such varied companionship as had given attraction to the seat of government at New York and then at Philadelphia; yet at Georgetown there was a society which called itself eminently polite, and Mrs. Adams records that she returned fifteen calls in a single day.—Harper's Magazine.

LITTLE AH SID.

Little Ah Sid
Was a Christian kid
A cute little ense, you'd declare—
With eyes full of fun
And a nose that began
Right up at the tools of his hair.

Jolly and fat
Was the frolicsome brat,
As he played through the long summer day,
And bundled his cue
At his father used to,
In Chinesand, far, far away.

He soared o'er a town
That Ah Sid had placed upon
A tombstone—how in the spring?
"Melons buried in"
Said he, with winking eye,
"Me catch mud pie! me no sing."

Then with his cap
He struck in a rap—
This innocent Celestial de-lee—
And put in reams
In the seat of his pants,
For a pocket there had to be chinee.

Down on the grass
Sat the little rascal,
In a sorry, but thoroughly demure,
And sad with it all—
That was plain to tell sig,
"Me much sin hastily, sure."

Little Ah Sid
Was only a kid,
Nor could on a spree him to guess
What kind of a lay
He was holding so sing
In the lobb of his bosom-hilling dress.

"Kiyu! Kiyiyee!"
Ah Sid cried, as he
Rose hasty-ily up from that spot.
"Kiyu! Yuk-a-kaw!
Issa-in Japan now—
I'm hastily lotty much hot!"

A ROGUE'S REWARD.

BY KENDRICK.

"A strange motto for a family, is it not?" he asks, holding up the heavy seal ring he had drawn from his finger.

"What is it? Translate—you know I can't read Latin," says my lady, looking up from the depths of those soft, easy cushions, against the dark velvet of which her neck and face and arms shone like pure Carrara.

He leans still closer and drops his voice, as if the words held for him some strange forbidding.

"It—who forgets shall be in turn forgotten."

"Yes, it is a queer one," says my lady, meditatively, gazing intently on the handsome, gentlemanly face beside her.

"Queer, too, that you should read it to mamma—under such circumstances, you know. If it were different——" she pauses and shrugs her shoulders and waves her hand impatiently, then sighs and turns her face from me all. The ring falls to the floor, and Julian Frere catches her hand as it rests flutteringly upon her breast.

"My darling," he cries, forgetful of the very words that gave rise to her emotion, "only answer me as I wish—as I must be answered, and we shall be happy—oh, so happy, if you will.

My lady slowly turns her face back to mine, and her eyes are dark with passion, yet with a half contempt for his unmanliness in their dreary depths which he has never seen before.

"Do you think, Julian, that there are day dreams from which we must awaken, love scenes over which the curtain will fall surely when the little comedy has been played, and even the actors themselves are yawning?"

My lady smiles, as if looks away, for out over the waters of the Mediterranean, and the expression of coolness and contempt deepens in her eyes.

But Julian only sees a beautiful woman who day by day and week by week has lured him on to love and worship her.

He stretches out his arms to clasp her in them, but she makes no response as she has always done before.

"It has been no comedy on my part," he muttered, fiercely. "You have no right to say it has been on yours."

"Ah, my friend, did I say that? I only meant—well, you will force me to use such plain words. That motto brought to mind the peculiar circumstances which surround us both. Bernard I—he audibly stops, then goes rapidly on—"there you are, I mean, engaged to a young lady, not beautiful, you say, but talented, tuneful, and simple, one who would make you happy—oh, far happier than I could or would. For I am terribly selfish, Julian—" she laughs gayly as it in denial of the serious charge she so lightly brought against herself—"and I would not make you a good wife. I am too fond of throwing away naps at dear Mr. Blanc's little green table. I like the society of your set too well to put up long with the—with the oh, the fact is that a husband, you know, is just like your cook; you get used to his style, and tire of it, and naturally want a change. So with me exactly, dear Julian. We have enjoyed ourselves together for a time. Shall we not part as friends, dear friends, if you choose, but—but nothing more, you know?"

He takes her hands and kisses them passionately.

"I care for no one else and can think of no one else now. Heavens forgive me but I cannot," he murmurs.

For a moment she says nothing, but rests in his arms, peaceful, content.

If no remorseful picture disturbs his selfish feeling, shall she allow the shadow of a woman whom she has never met to come between them then? To be sure, she is married—she has never told Julian that—but Lord Curlio is away off in Algiers, where the war is, and perhaps is dead, or nearly so, for the Africans are terrible fighters, they say. So she gives herself up to his caresses, and for an hour or so is distant quite it seems to him—is happy in the silence which falls—soothingly upon them, as the twilight steals over the quiet waves and enhances all the brightness without to soulless shish creep, creep slowly into the rooms and leave dim forms and shapes in every corner.

Many other days had been passed in like manner, and Julian Frere had been content to let them go in sweet forgetfulness of time, of place, of eternity itself—content to sit at Isabel Carlio's feet, enslaved—enamored, if you like, but trapped of his own free will.

How long the time was since he had left his own home in England, he neither knew nor cared. How long since he left a sweet face—so dear to him once—he cared not and would not even remember.

Yet, gentle letters came very often, breathing love and truthfulness, but never a word of reproach at the cold answers which his unwilling fingers penned.

He had once imagined that he loved this English girl, with her tender manners and soft brown, trustful eyes. But, oh, Dio mio, he had not then seen tender eyes flash with a passion whose fierceness enhances their brilliance, nor lips more than half willing for frequent meetings with his own. The gentle English girl should have his name—it was promised, and he was in honor bound to that. But this dark, tawny woman of the South, with her Italian arts of love and Parisian graces, which charmed and lulled his senses into dreamland—never could he wring his heart from her keeping, and what will be will be.

He went out from his room that evening, and left the ring with the strange motto engraved on it lying on the floor.

The next day he called at the Villa Carlio, but my lady was out.

The day after, at his accustomed hour, he went again.

My lady was still out, the footman said.

"But had she left no word—no message?" asked Julian.

"Oh, surely. If the signor came there was a little note."

Julian's hand trembled as he received a small, crumpled note, which the footman carelessly drew from his pocket.

Beneath the huge porch of the Parthenon, where the moonlight streams down in a broad flood and merges step by step into the farther shadows, Julian read the letter:

"Caro mio," it began—ah, the soft Italian phrase, which seemed doubly sweet and tender from her lips or pen

"I have been thinking deeply for the last two days, and have come to a sensible resolution. If my lady Eva could have shown half the sense of which I shall presently make an exhibition much trouble might have been averted.

"Dear Julian, you are young and gay and love society, and I am old, and I curse and swear when I tell you. Well, so be it. I shall not be the cre to bear, but what I say is this—that we must part.

"For your little English girl will begin to be impatient at your absence, and I—well, I must tell you my husband is coming home from the war in Algiers, for I am married. Why not tell you before? It matters nothing now. If you will be angry, console yourself with one thought—that I love you for yourself, and so send you from me.

"If I loved you for myself, I would not be such a model of domestic virtue as you will now picture me, but would keep you near me whether Mihord Carlio comes or not, or would fly with you to the earth's end before my conscience ever loose their hold upon your neck.

"But I have a memory of a young heart broken for sake of him who went away and never saw again the olives and the vine-leaves which grew in the valley of my home. Shall I cause a waiting for you, Julian, in her own land, and I—well, I am waiting for Mihord Carlio, as a good wife should be.

"The letter closed abruptly. Julian leaned up against one of the marble pillars, and pondered deeply every word.

"Loved him for himself, and so sent him from her——" his spoken would not allow him to believe in her miselfishness.

"Tired of me, more likely," he muttered angrily, "and so, womanlike, shifts the blame from her own shoulders when weary of old game, and longing for new."

He lingered for three weeks in Rome, in the hope of some chance meeting with her, but the meeting never occurred. Then he sailed for home, with a manliness of which my lady scarcely dreamed him capable to recall to take the advice she had given in the letter, and go back to England—to his betrothed.

It was not until he was well on his way that he began to think of the terrible depths of his sojourn in Rome—some seven months—he was reluctant to acknowledge it, yet he had scattered broad-seeds with my lady in the gay carnival season, and it was past October now.

On the pier at Dover his eldest brother met him.

"Why! where are you bound for?" asked Julian, in surprise.

An expression of sorrow came over the other's features.

"I was going in search of you," he said hurriedly, "for I don't think the home coming will be pleasant for you now."

"Why not?" said Julian, a vague feeling of relief creeping unconsciously upon him.

"Well, you see—over two months ago it happened—John Moorly, you remember him—he and Muran—oh, I can't tell it—the girl was such a traitor, but she's gone with him, left home, broke faith with you, everything, to marry a sub-in a marching regiment."

Such a wave of happiness swept over Julian's face.

"Strange, dear fellow!" he cried, seizing his brother's hand eagerly, "—I don't care—my heart's not broken. She never really liked me. I am glad she'll be happy in her own way at last.

But I can't stay here to see it—it would drive me wild," he added with unutterable fulness.

So George turned toward London, while Julian took the next steamer for Calais.

How the journey passed, the days—the hours, he knew not. He could only think of their reunion in that lovely Italian land. Would she be glad to see him, and would he be as happy as he imagined he would be to sit at her feet and dream of castles that would never be peopled, but with fancies and of hopes which could never be realized on earth, the unfortunate existence of Mihord Carlio.

Yes, he would be happy—supremely so—only to sit in the same sunshine that cast its brilliant beams on her, only to wait like her pet dog, Baron, on every caprice of a whimsical mistress.

Hour by hour he left the cities and villages of France behind him, and came at last to the Eternal City. He had not the courage to go at once to the Villa Carlio and proclaim his freedom—a vague idea that she would laugh as well as weep under her shawl.

Yet she knew of his arrival. Some lines in the Italian journals spoke of that.

One day while he was cowing out of Spithover's, where he had been to get some of Anderson's photographs, the well-known brougham of Lady Carlio, with its liveries of crimson and silver, drew up. Its handsome mistress alighted.

She started with evident surprise as her eye fell on Julian. Then she came nearer and gave him her hand. For a moment neither spoke.

"I—I had your letter, and obeyed," said Julian softly.

"Then why—why are you back again?" asked my lady, with a little quiver in her voice.

He looked meaningly around him. "Such a crowd—so many here," he said, and shrugged his shoulders.

"Ah, I understand. There is some explanation. Come to me at 5 o'clock."

She bowed and passed on, leaving Julian standing irresolute on the pavement.

It was 2 o'clock then. Up and down the Piazza di Spagna he paced, unmindful of the sun and birds, untwitte standing the freshness of a Roman winter, beat down in a fierce, blinding glare of light.

He so longed to go, and now that he was bidden, he scarcely dared to obey lest misfortune in his own ardent impatience. But toward the hour appointed he turned out into the Via Babuino, the street leading directly to my lady's villa.

She was alone in the very room in which their last interview had been held. She came forward to receive him with a dignified composure, which well became her, rare though these moods were. She only said:

"I am glad to see you, Julian, things are so dull."

But her eyes gave forth a welcome which he had not dreamed of seeing after.

"What is the matter—why are you here so soon?" she questioned, and breathlessly and somewhat hesitatingly he answered her.

When he had finished, she glanced up with a look of almost eager longing into his face.

"Julian," she said, in a low tone, "we have met with misfortune. I, too, have lost. Poor Carlio never came back from the war in Algiers."

"Yes, we are unfortunate," he answered with some embarrassment. "The old motto is on my ring—you spoke of it that day, you recollect. Well, the gods have proved true in my case. I was base enough to forget, and so I am forgotten. Are you glad or sorry?"

He did not look at her for her answer. He only leaned his head against the low marble mantel, and his fingers drummed under far away.

Gently she clasped her hands around his arm. "Dear Julian," she said, "sorry—no, you are not forgotten. Will you not believe that one will always remember?"

His head was turned away, but he pressed her hands tightly with both his own.

"Caro—caro, must I beg of you? Why will you not forgive me for sending you away?"

Still he was silent.

"There is nothing now to reproach me. There will be nothing to reproach you, Julian—caro mio. Why are you cold to me now?"

He had gone there half resolved to pay her in part for the anguish she had made him suffer when she wrote those cruel lines which had driven him away, but could not withstand her pleading tones. He caught her light form in his arms, and almost crushed her in his strong embrace.

"Oh, my darling, I shall never be cast off now. Of what matter if all the world forgets, so that you alone will remember?"

He kissed her passionately and pressed her closer to his breast. My lady looked up with an arch smile into his earnest eyes.

"Julian, caro, I am thinking, we were once so wrong in loving, and now we are so happy. Why is it that the wicked ones have better fortune and the good ones are often beggars at the gate? If you had been too true to the English girl to have looked at me or ever kissed me, and I too good a wife to take such kisses, why, she might have stayed to make your life unhappy, and Mihord Carlio would have come home from Algiers as sure as daylight. But you were different, you see, and other things were different also."

So it shall always be. There are other men like Julian, and there is a Lady Carlio for every one.

NATIONAL LABOR PARTY.

Its Members Given Leave to Choose Between the Republicans and Democrats.

[New York dispatch.]

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Labor party was held this afternoon at No. 32 Dune street. Mr. Wilson S. Wolf presided. It was reported by the Committee on Legislation that the principles desired by the National Labor party had been incorporated in both the Republican and Democratic platforms, and the following resolution presented by it was adopted:

WHEREAS, The Republican and Democratic National Conventions have inserted in their platforms the principles and policy of the National labor party as adopted at Philadelphia Jan. 12, 1887, and

WHEREAS, This action insures to the working classes a fair consideration of the evils that affect their condition and needed legislation in their interests; and

WHEREAS, The Greenback and Anti-Monopoly party refused to adopt a plank for the protection of American labor, and has now, as in the past, opposed all measures for the benefit of the workingmen that would increase their pay or shorten their hours of labor, and at heart are for free trade, long hours, cheap men and women, and low wages.

Resolved, That we repudiate the effort now being made to commit the Labor party to the support of a third-party candidate, and recommend all workingmen to cast their votes for the candidates of the regular party that in their opinion best represents their interests, as the surest and best method of securing speedy legislation in the interests of the working classes.

Resolved, That we recommend co-operation in each congressional district with the one of the regular parties for the election of men pledged to legislate in the interests of working classes, and we will oppose all efforts made to obtain control of government a class contrary to wage earners.

The following were chosen members of the committee that these efforts should be put forward in district and county organizations.

ECONOMY IN THE CAMPAIGN.

Democrats Poorer than Ever, and Republicans Holding Tight to Their Purses.

[Washington telegram.]

There has been no campaign since antebellum days that has been conducted on such rigorously economical principles as that upon which both parties are now entering. The Republican party, always poor, seems poorer than ever, and a visit to their headquarters in this city would convince one of that fact after a brief chat with the attaches. It is difficult to secure money for postage stamps and other incidental expenses. It is almost as bad at the Democratic headquarters. The treasurer and clerks, under the stimulus of public opinion, have done their best to raise funds, but the majority of cases flatly refuse to contribute a cent. The assessments from the departments have been generally neglected the Republicans not less than $100,000. This year it will not equal one-tenth of that sum. From all over the country come reports of indifference on the part of holding Republicans whose liberality hitherto has been the least and largest of the party. Charles Foster is quoted as saying that he will not furnish a penny of aid. This is not the only case of this nature. In 1876, when the country was passing through a period of commercial depression far greater than that which exists at present, there were large contributions from all sides. The money was counted out by the fifties and hundreds; to-day it is doled out in ones and twos. It is difficult to get a reason for this cause, unless it be that the business men of the country feel satisfied that they will drift along in about the usual fashion, no matter whether the Republicans or Democrats are successful.

VAST TREFTS OF LAND.

Many Million Acres of the Public Domain Stolen.

A Commissioner of the General Land Office, who was sent to Colorado some time ago to investigate complaints made by settlers against cattle companies that they had illegally fenced in public lands and had obtained occupation of large tracts by fraudulent entry, has made a report fully sustaining the settlers. Eight charges have been made against the Prairie Cattle Company, composed of Scotchmen. Tracts of 100 square miles twenty-five square miles, seventy-five square miles and sixteen square miles have been illegally fenced in by that corporation. It is believed that the cattle companies have fraudulently possessed themselves of nearly 6,000,000 acres of public lands in Colorado alone within the last five years. In New Mexico it is asserted that 70 per cent. of the land claimed by the cattlemen have been illegally inclosed; in Dakota 75 per cent. are declared. Investigation proves that in Arkansas there have been 10 fraudulent entries, in Dakota 160, in Colorado 280 entries, 2,880,000 acres, in New Mexico 827 embracing 1,500,000 acres, in Minnesota 311 in Washington Territory 105, in Idaho 92, in Nebraska 150 embracing 300,000 acres, in Montana 24, in Wyoming 21 embracing 250,000 acres, in Montana 154, and in Kansas the fraudulent entries embrace 320,000 acres. Over 3,000 entries have yet to be investigated. A large percentage of these have been made fraudulent entries and who have illegally inclosed them. Contracts of the public domain are English and Scotch capitalists.

Henry Bank Robbery.

[St. Paul Minn.] special.

The People's Bank was most adroitly and successfully robbed some time between Saturday night and Monday morning. Eddie Mason, a young fellow of St. Paul, who has been in the bank hardly six weeks, and who went in to learn the business, has disappeared. He is but 16 years old. The whole town was startled on Monday morning, when upon opening the vault and the inside safe it was discovered that between $30,000 and $40,000 had been stolen, the exact sum not being learned. The outer vault door and lock were all right, securely locked, and bearing no evidence of interference. Mr. Rittenhouse, cashier of the bank, opened the vault, the inside doors, and finally the inside safe before discovering that there was anything wrong. Then the loss was apparent. Nearly $10,000 was missing. This was the first and only clew. Nothing has been discovered of the whereabouts of young Mason.

State Conventions of the Greenbackers in Texas and Wisconsin.

The Greenback Anti-Monopoly Convention of Illinois was held at Washington on the 27th of August. Streeter was elected Chairman, and Elton was made Secretary.

At the outset a Committee on Resolutions was appointed and reported the following:

Resolved, That the People's party of the State of Illinois in convention assembled indorse and reaffirm the platform of principles enunciated by the National Anti-Monopoly Convention held at Chicago, May 29, 1884, and pledge ourselves to the honorable endeavor to elect our representatives, Butler and Weed, for the Presidency and Vice Presidency.

A motion was made to proceed to the nomination of candidates for State officers. To this an amendment was offered in the shape of a resolution declaring that the question be referred to the State Central Committee, with instructions to proceed to the election of men pledged to legislate in the interests of working classes, and we will oppose all efforts made to obtain control of government a class contrary to wage earners, whether classes of society or upon candidates of the Republican or Democratic party.

THE MONKS OF CHINA.

Life in the Wisdowless Pagodas of Rest.

Wong Chin Foo, formerly editor of the Chinese American, is a contributor to the columns of the Brooklyn Eagle. Of a Chinese brotherhood of ascetics he says:

In the Flowery Kingdom men get tired of life, of society, of the endless struggle for existence, and retire to some retreat where they can pass their remaining days in quiet, study, and benefaction. These retreats (miaus) correspond to the monasteries of Christian lands. They are invariably long brick buildings, one story in height, simple and solemn in architecture, and located either upon the mountains or in the depths of forests. Around the building is a windowless wall, symbolic of the busy life forever shut out from view. In the grounds, and upon the surrounding land, nature is assisted, but never interfered with. The flowers bloom and die, the trees grow gnarled and crooked, the weeds and creepers thrive until sometimes it would seem as if no human being lived in the vicinity. Close examination will show that every plant producing beautiful flowers or wholesome food and fruit is carefully watched and watered, and every resources of vegetation in supplying human wants husbanded to the last degree. This also is a symbolism of the brotherhood who tenant these retreats. To them the useful flower and tree represent the good of humanity; the weeds the evil. The duty of a true manhood is to aid and develop those who are righteous, but not to injure the wrong-doer, leaving to nature the task of eliminating the latter from her great economy. These retreats do not belong to specific orders, as in the Western civilization, but are founded by one or more persons for the simple sake of rest. The forms and ceremonies of admission amongst to nothing. Any person who has failed in life, who has lost those he loved, who has ruined and repented, who is old and unable to work, is eligible. He presents himself, giving his name, address, and history, transfers to the brotherhood all he possesses, promises obedience to all lawful commands of the Superior, Superior loyalty, friendship, and sympathy to his fellow members, and devotion and aid to all human beings in sickness or distress. He is then admitted, given a new name and a new costume, assigned a room, instructed as to his duties, and the initiation is complete. From now on his life is fixed. Study and conversation, the cultivation of the field and garden, or the improvement of the forest and the instruction of brothers who have been less favored, are his daily duties. At times he is sent out to obtain subscriptions for the common fund, or to nurse the sick or feed the starving, but these occur infrequently.

Sometimes a great show of kindness is merely fur de vantage o' de pusson what it comes from. De cattle what hol's up or apple fur a pusson ter bite dean' do it so much because he wants de pusson ter hab some o' it, but 'cause when it's bit he kon git er better holt hisself.—Arkansaw Traveler.

An English Habit.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing easier than to prove that hard drinking has been an essentially English habit since the dawn of our history. Shakespeare, who left off writing 270 years ago, paints a whole gallery of typical drunkards, and, by the mouth of Iago, claims the Englishman as far and away of the busy life forever shut out from of the most consummate toper in Europe.

In 1596 it is on record that Doice Rose, Abbess of Ramsey, one of the wealthiest convents in the kingdom, and tenanted mostly by noble dames, was accused before Bishop Fox of excessing habitually far into the night with her nuns—a pretty strong proof that hard drinking was then a national vice.

Toward the end of the fourteenth century Chaucer represents all his loveliest characters as jolly topers. The miller can hardly sit on his horse and the cook tumbles off into the mire in consequence of their potations. The wife of the miller of Bentge does not go to bed without "her jolly whistle well wet." In 1575 the noble dame Cleuentina Guilford, Abbess of Romsey, and the worthy predecessor of Joice Rowe, drinks herself to death.

Some generations earlier the author of the romance of "Merlin" describes the mother of his hero—a highly respected noble young woman—as accompanying her neighbors to the ale-house, swilling there till long past midnight, taking a tipsy share in a brawl, and then falling, literally as well as figuratively, into the claws of the demon, the whole thing taking place as quite a matter of course.

In the reign of Stephen comes Walter Map, the jovial Archdeacon of Oxford, with his widely popular drinking songs. A century earlier the whole Saxon army spent the night before the battle of Hastings in pushing about the bowl.

And so we go back century by century; poets, moralists, satirists, and the canons of provincial councils all telling us that deep drinking was the rule all over Great Britain up to the time when our ancestors could form no other idea of heaven than as a place where fierce bouts of fighting and bouts as fierce of drinking were the only occupations and enjoyments.—St. James' Gazette.

Cooking as an Art.

The man who presides over the kitchen in a first-class hotel is an absolute monarch. Nobody ventures to question his rule. Nobody of experience makes their feeble suggestions in a deferential way. The modern chef is an artist as far as a student, and for his use is provided a library filled without the standard works upon his art. Here he consults his authorities, and plans his campaigns. Napoleon-like conquest. In the kitchen are subordinates of many grades who look up to the king with awe. The chef of a leading hotel in New York lately admitted a reporter to his inner sanctum, and there confided to him the grand secret of the cooking art. This, it appears, is the making of sauces. "Everything in its raw state," says the oracle, "has a distinctive taste, but the cook's art is to bring it to the surface so that it reaches the palate. The secret in our profession is to supply the flavors when they are absent and develop them when they are there, just as a painter makes his effect stand out from the canvas."—Boston Herald.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER,

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine gladly claims for its superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if it is use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood as Scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

DR. JOHN BULL'S VEGETABLE WORM DESTROYER is prepared in the form of candy drops, attractive to the sight and pleasant to the taste.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Sept. 4, 1884.

Around the County.

Bay Springs.

Wm. H. Rogers' wheat averaged 32 bushels per acre.

G. C. Rivet has gone to Manitoulin island on business.

Col. O. P. Wisner has our thanks for a pamphlet copy of his poem, "Hadnsaah."

The infant daughter of Geo. Griffin died last Friday night of cholera infantum. She was about a year old.

The infant son of Samuel Hall died last Monday. Funeral services on Tuesday, conducted by Rev. G. W. Howe.

The spindle factory of Geo. C. Bean & Co., burned June 1st, has been rebuilt and is in full working order. Instead of running a bolting saw, as formerly, they have a saw mill, carrying 30 inch saws, and cutting logs 30 feet long. They make 1,400 to 1,500 spindles per day, employing 10 to 12 men.

Mrs. J. W. McNeal's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David C. Hunt, from Three Oaks, Berrien county, are visiting in Bay Springs. Mr. Hunt is pleased with Bay Springs, and intends to purchase a place soon for a permanent home. He is 69 years old, and she is nearly as old. They are religious people, and we are glad the venerable couple have come to spend the evening of their lives with us.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Cadwell, Mrs. W. A. North, Mrs. G. C. Rivet, Mrs. D. Niver, and Emma Flinhrer, went with a hand car a few days since to pick blackberries. When returning home, in the vicinity of M. W. Aldrich's place, the car was thrown from the track by a stick put there by some misguided specimen of humanity. The unfortunate party heard a snick owing to the extended near them. All escaped with only slight bruises except Mrs. W. A. North, who was so badly hurt that she has since been unable to work, and is confined to her bed a part of the time. [A person guilty of such dewitry should serve the state behind prison bars until they learned the value of human life.—Ed. Journal.]

Ironton.

The church is nearing completion and will be dedicated soon.

R. M. Cheeney is in town for a few days to look over the furnace estate.

There are no new cases of scarlet fever in town. The doctor comes every day.

A large vessel is loading with pig iron for Cleveland, O. She will carry five hundred tons.

H. B. Chapman and wife, of Bay Springs, were visiting at the Pioneer House on Friday last.

It is rumored that all the furnaces in the state will shut down the fifteenth of the present month.

The furnace went into blast Sunday evening, it having been banked up for a week to repair the boiler and hot blast.

Mr. Heth, at the Pioneer House, who had his leg broken some three weeks ago, is doing as well as can be expected.

The steamer M. W. Wright gave an excursion to Oyster Bay, last Sunday, to Indian camp meeting. She was well loaded.

On the Blaine and Logan pole at Ironton, the flag is no where near the top, and strangers coming into our town enquire, "who is dead?" We say "Blaine and Logan."

South Arm.

The Nellie Booth has made frequent visits here of late.

T. C. Bird, of Ironton, attended the quarterly services here on Saturday and Sunday last.

Rev. Mr. Sparks has been on the sick list, but is now able to attend to his ministerial duties again.

Thomas Tyndall, who has been stopping at Ironton for a few weeks, was seen here again on Saturday.

Prayer meeting was held here on Saturday evening last, which is to be continued weekly. The next is to be held on Wednesday evening.

The welcome sight and sound of the Gazelle is again here. Her accommodating officers merit high praise for her safety and regularity.

Quarterly meeting services of the M. E. church were held here on Aug. 30 and 31. Unavoidable circumstances detained the presiding elder, but his place was acceptably filled on Saturday by Rev. Richard Tyndall, and on Sunday by Rev. S. P. May. A number of people from the county swelled the numbers present and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

Burgess.

Effie Pierce, who has been sick, is slowly recovering.

Capt. Haynes, of Boyne, was visiting at Mr Arnold's Sunday last.

Several republicans in Hayes straddle the fence, all going for Butler.

Indian camp-meeting closed Sunday evening, or rather Monday morning.

We hear it rumored that Josiah Dixon, who went to Louisville, Ky., is dead.

Grand Rally at Gibson's school house last Saturday evening—two men and a boy present.

Now the gay and festive threshing machine is heard in Hayes, the Hamlin brothers have started the music.

A young man from Charlevoix came very near losing one of George Cook's horses in Susan Lake Sunday.

Annual school meeting in district No. 4, had rather a slim attendance. One officer and four or five others to vote away the people's money.

Springvale.

Farmers are busy harvesting.

Blackberries and pickers are a good crop this year.

B. W. Fosdick contemplates erecting a dwelling on his farm this fall.

David C. Webb, a veteran of the late war, has received a pension of $4,100.

Samuel Thatcher, and Wm. Adams, commence threshing for the farmers next week.

The schools are closed for this season in districts No. 1, 2, and 5. The school is in session in No. 4 at present.

J. E. Chew, who has been teaching in district No. 2 for the past five months, returned to his home in Hayes last week.

Will Not Crush My Manhood.

Fill not the glass for me
With wine, bright ruby red;
No, no, far better would it be
To rest among the dead
Than link to such relief
From care and grief and pain;
Then urge me not to drink—
Oh, urge me not again!

I can not drown my sorrow
With bright and flowing wine;
It can not bring sweet comfort
To this sad heart of mine;
But if I taste the poison,
My brain seems all on fire,
My heart filled with some base, unholy, but desire.

Then take this glass away,
Because the taste I hate,
I will not crush my manhood,
And drink with wicked mate;
When Heaven sees fit to free me
From woes so galling chain,
My heart will be all lightness,
All joy and peace again.

—Irish World.

Governor Robinson, of Massachusetts, in a recent address before the social temperance union, of Boston, said: "Yesterday I visited the good Boston house of correction, and as I passed around through the shops and looked the men in their faces, and as I went into the female departments and saw the inmates there, I said to the master, 'rum has done about all this work.' 'Yes,' said he, 'nearly all is the harvest of intoxicating drink.' You can see it in the faces of these people. It is the same story at Sher born among the woman there. You could not spend an afternoon at that institution without having the conviction brought home to your minds with an indelible impression. It is the same story in every one of our penal institutions. But this is only one phase of the evil. It is presented elsewhere. In business life, in public life, we are confronted all the time with the terrible evils that come out of the debasement of men who will surrender themselves to drink. I need not speak of the family. I need not allude to the home, we all appreciate the misery which intemperance causes. Now, it is such an evil as that presenting itself to us all the time, that we want to array ourselves together and move forward solidly against."

Alcohol as a Drink.

Omitting all reference to the mental and moral ravages of intemperance, it would require a lifetime to recount the pains and aches, the malignant diseases induced by the demon intemperance. We have already seen that all alcoholic liquors impair, retard and complicate digestion always and everywhere, both in the case of sick and the well, thus preventing the normal and full nourishment of the system. Some of the reliefs may endure this for a time, but the sick may safely avoid all combinations of it, in the matter of digestion as they need all of the strength possible, and they only resist the inroads of disease. It always and everywhere wastes power—never generating any—prevents the renovation of the blood, the whole body, increases the labors of the heart, by which it must weaken that organ, deranges the brain and nerves, vitiates the blood and all of the digestive juices, none of which effects are favorable to even the robust, while none of the sick can tolerate any such narcotic agencies.

The action of alcohol—as a drink, medicine or a bath—is always in the line of paralysis. Let this thought be emphasized; it always and everywhere tends to benumb, derange and eventually impair and destroy the sensibilities. In illustration, observe the "rum-blossom" of the drunkard, the red and enlarged nose. The blood vessels are so paralyzed that they can not perform their ordinary labors, from which fact, in consequence of their relaxed state, the blood is not urged on the vessel becoming engorged at particular places—in the face more especially—the accumulation and engorgment increasing the size of the nose, red enough to serve as a warning—like a light-house—to guard the young from being wrecked on the hidden rocks of drunkenness!

Alcohol is a "two-edged sword," fearfully destroying the vital forces. It attacks both directly and indirectly, first reducing the power of all of the organs of the body, then indirectly aggravating the evils by reducing their nourishment, by impairing digestion. This is an apt illustration of the Bible assertion that "if one member suffers, all will suffer with it."

Detroit had a Mother Hubbard excursion last week. It was a loose affair. Before it ended a dozen men and half as many girls had bruised and bleeding bodies, and spent the balance of the night at the central station.

A Cheboygan fire which, might have been a big blaze had it not been put out, had its earliest stages originated from a tobacco pipe placed unextinguished in the pocket of a coat which was afterwards hung up in a hotel barn.

British Barnum, according to a recent census, covers as great an area as England, Scotland and Wales. Its population, a little more than that of London, includes 246,239 more men than women. Still it shows signs of unprecedented growth.

The Irish population of the earth is as follows: At home 7,500,000; in England, 2,500,000; in Scotland, 2,000,000; in Canada, 2,000,000; in Australia, 1,000,000; in America, 12,500,000; elsewhere, 5,000,000. A total in round numbers of 32,500,000.

Colorado now, 8 years old as a State, counts a settled population of 300,000, and a taxable valuation of $110,000,000, representing an actual property value of $200,000,000. It is traversed by nearly 3,000 miles of railroad, four trunk lines connecting Denver, the capital city, with the East.

There is no sadder sight than a family of growing boys and girls, or grown-up young men and women, accepting coldly and carelessly every form of sacrifice and favor from loving parents, who are wearing out their lives in their service, and reaping only ingratitude and indifference in return.

During the republican convention at Chicago, the bar at which the delegates got the principal part of their imagination, took in $1,400 in one day. Anybody that "throws away his vote" for St. John is a crank. The republican party is a "grosdenough temperance party for me."—Western Brice.

The sources of our supply of lumber in Canada and in Michigan are disappearing quite as rapidly as in Ohio or New York, and long before the trees that we plant now have grown to a size for use, the prices they will then bring will prove to have been a good investment from the beginning.—Dr. Franklin B. Hough.

Twenty-five young men of Bogerford, Carbon County, Pa., have formed a co-operative society to provide themselves with gold watches. They pay $1.00 weekly into the treasury for a year, and every two weeks one of them draws a watch by lot. A Manch Chunk jeweler has contracted to furnish them with twenty-five watches at $50 each.

A young son of a Connecticut preacher recently joined a band of juvenile cut-throats, called the "Watchful Nutmeggers." He was introduced by his guide as "darkness," and the password at the threshold of the lodge-room was "Can he eat bloody oats?" He was treated so roughly during the initiation that he disclosed the secrets to his parents.

A Chinese pieemaker in San Francisco came down on the price of a life-sized deity to a reporter from "twenty-five dollars since dollar." He explained that a joss was no better than that much wood and paper until after a priest had consecrated it and placed a speck of red paint on each of its eyes. This is supposed to give it the power of seeing not only all the past but through the future to the end of time.

Allen is situated seven miles north of Manceloan and nine miles south of Elmira. It has good soil on all sides, the best of rich location on the G. R. & I., north of Cadillac. About three miles east of the place, there lies a tract of solid pine timber, twenty miles broad, and extending south as far as Missaukee county. The remainder of the country around Allen is timbered with hardwood such as maple, beach, birch, elm, hemlock, oak, basswood and cedar. The place now has 500 inhabitants, and contains eight business houses, one saw mill and planing mill, one broom handle factory, one cant hook handle and bowl factory, one blacksmith shop, a hotel and saloon. The town needs a lawyer, baker, dressmaker, meat market, and a man with sufficient funds to loan on real estate. There is every prospect of a new railway from Bellaire, to Alpena, touching at Alba and Gaylord. Such a line would be a great benefit to the town, as it would give the merchants the advantage of lake freights.—Michigan Tradesman.

The absence of all surgical attendants in the field does not aid to the satisfaction of service in the Chinese army. The theory advanced to explain this brutality is not so much a callous indifference to human life as a superstition, akin to that of "the peculiar people," who refuse all medical advice to their children. The man who gets a bad wound is regarded as one whom the gods mean to die. For a like cause the Chinese are reluctant to rescue the drowning.

The insurance commissioner of the state has applied to the courts for the appointment of a receiver to close up the affairs of the Michigan Mutual Fire Insurance company of Grand Rapids. This company was organized in November, 1883. It has written 2,406 policies, aggregating $1,700,000. The losses to July 18 were $32,000, of which only $8,000 have been paid, leaving $37,000 to be assessed on outstanding premiums.

By fusion the party in power can be made to face the united opposition—a very desirable consideration. A party is thus put upon its mettle. If its course has been such as to commend it to the people it will be continued in power. If it has failed to satisfy the people each class that has a grievance can unite with every other offended set and in this way secure a united victory instead of a defeat in detail. A party ought to hold power no longer than it can satisfy the majority of the people. In this way alone can the responsibility be firmly placed on a party's shoulders.

John Coyne, of Denver, has ordered a gold-mounted collar for his dog. One night not long since Coyne's house took fire, and being a light affair, was being rapidly swallowed up. Being a heavy sleeper, he did not hear the crackling flames, and would soon have been cremated had not his dog burst his kennel open, rushed into his master's room, and scratched him in the face until he wakened up. So narrow was his escape that he had not even time to get his pocketbook from his pillow.

In traveling he gets into the first compartment at hand, and sits anywhere; if he finds an agreeable companion he talks, if not he folds his arms and goes to sleep, never waking until he reaches his destination. When he went down the other day to Chesnay, near Bourdeaux, he requested the guard to wake him, but he should go beyond. On a voyage from Marseilles to Alexandria he slept 107 hours out of the 120 of the voyage, and then not for some days.

Editors in German-Poland are learning with a vengeance what is meant by liberty of the press under Prince Bismarck. One of them has spent five months of the past year in prison, and has six months more in prospect. Another has been condemned to eleven and one-third months imprisonment. A third is now in prison for fifteen months, a fourth for three months, and a fifth for four months. A total in figures of nine years and eight and one-third months' imprisonment for editors in one year. Only two political papers exist in Posen with editors not in prison.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat is a republican paper and is now using all kinds of unscrupulous means to secure the election of Blaine and Logan, notwithstanding it was only on the 23d of May last that the following compliment to the plumed knight appeared in that paper: "He is an old clem man, and the people will not have him. He stands self convicted of prostituting the high office he has held to build up a private fortune, of establishing with corruption for dishonest imagey. His record would damn him." Remember, this is not a "democratic lie," but an editorial in one of the staunchest republican papers of the south or west. Missouri Democrat.

The Calhoun monument, which is under course of construction at Louisville, was seen in embryo at the other day. The monument will be an elegant structure of gray granite, 10 feet square at the base and very massive throughout, 9 feet high, and finished in the highest styles of monumental art. The front section will bear the following inscription: "The State of South Carolina erects this monument to mark the resting place of her favorite son, John C. Calhoun, unsurpassed in patriotism, talents, and virtue." The huge block will have a highly polished column at each corner, with an elaborately carved capital surmounting the same, on the cap above, the great seal of South Carolina in bas-relief of pure bronze will be inserted in the centre.

SENATOR HENRY B. ANTHONY died rather suddenly at Providence, R. I., at the age of 62. The deceased was born of Quaker parents at Coventry, R. I., April 4, 1815. He received his early education in the place of his birth, and received a collegiate course at Brown University, where he graduated in A. D. 1833. Five years later he became editor and proprietor of the Providence Journal. His success as an editor and journalist was at once assured. Under his charge the paper increased rapidly in circulation, and finally became one of the leading journals not in Rhode Island but the States. Mr. Anthony's political career was not less brilliant. After holding various unimportant offices, he was in 1849 elected Governor of Rhode Island. He was again elected to the office in 1850, and would have been elected to a third term had he accepted the nomination. Eight years later he was elected United States Senator. At each of his successive re-elections he was re-elected, which is unprecedented in the history of the country. In 1883, while he held no office, and was not a candidate for any, he received 19 votes in the Republican caucus for United States Senator. A dispatch from Denver gives the following particulars of the accident: "At 11 o'clock last night the train belonging to the Adam Forepaugh circus, My Mother Shipping Co., left Greeley for Golden on the Greeley, Salt Lake and Pacific Railway. Forty minutes later, when near Greeley, the sleeping-car and the balloon car, which seventy-five mules, employed as roustabouts or hostlers, were housed, caught fire and was wholly consumed. THE Chicago Tribune prints extensive reports of the condition of the corn crop in Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri. The reports indicate a magnificent average for 1888. OHIO is what experts say the State will yield 45,000,000 bushels of excellent quality. This is the largest crop of the kind, except that of 1880, when the yield was 58,000,000 bushels. The oat crop will produce 24,000,000 bushels, or about 30 bushels to the acre. The barley crop will not exceed 1,000,000 bushels. The rye crop has suffered from drouth, and will be 25 per cent of an average crop. The buckwheat crop will be about 75 per cent. The Chicago paper, in commenting on the crop reports, says: "There is little change to report in local matters. The crops are safe and in Wisconsin, Nebraska, and Dakota an average yield is promised.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

CHARLES J. FOLGER, Secretary of the Treasury, died on the 4th inst. at Geneva, N. Y., in his 67th year. His demise is directly attributable to overwork. For two weeks he had been unable to lie down, and he died while sitting in a chair. Up to within twenty-four hours of his death he dictated and signed answering telegrams. The deceased was born in Nantucket, Mass., April 16, 1818. In 1857 his father removed to Geneva, N. Y., where Mr. Folger lived the rest of his life. After leaving college Mr. Folger studied law, and was admitted to the bar when 21 years old. His first office was that of Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, to which he was appointed in 1841, and he was soon after made a Master and Examiner in Chancery. In 1851 he was elected County Judge, and in 1861 the Supreme Court appointed him Referee in the Saratoga Springs case, involving the title to the Congress Springs property. In 1862 he was elected to the State Senate, and in 1863 was elected Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. A year later he resigned his seat on the bench to become Collector of Internal Revenue for the Geneva district, which place he held until 1867, when he resigned to accept the position of Solicitor of Internal Revenue at Washington. In 1870 he was appointed Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-office Department, and in 1871 was promoted to the Solicitorship of the Treasury Department. BURLINGTON (Vt.) dispatch: "Returns from 227 towns give Pingree Republican, Redington (Dem.), 19,057; Independent, Greenback, and scattering, 231. Pingree's majority, 21,951; Pingree's majority, 37,218. There are only thirteen towns to be heard from, and these towns gave against an aggregated vote of 936. They will probably add little to the Republican majority."

THE Indianapolis Sentinel made formal answer to Mr. Blaine's libel suit, maintaining that the publication complained of was a plea of justification, and denying that Mr. Blaine's domestic troubles were true, and, being so, were justly made public. Certain interrogatories propounded to the plaintiff touching his marriage, the birth of his first child, its death, and place of interment, and the manifestation of his agitation over its grave. During a sham battle at a soldiers' reunion at Fremont, Neb., forty spectators were injured by the explosion of a platform, but none of them fatally. ....The Northwestern Base-Ball League has sank $30,000 this season.

Notes and News.

The Marquette Mining Journal is the cleanest and handsomest daily paper in Michigan, outside of Detroit.

The question often asked, but never decisively answered, "Is beer intoxicating?" was illuminated to some extent near Detroit recently. The Krems family and their guests appear to have got drunk enough on a pure beer diet within a few hours to murder one man, place another at death's door, and cut and slash half a dozen more.

Some difficulty is being experienced in persuading the workers in the iron mills and coal mines of Ohio that good times have come again. The men are being discharged or cut down in large numbers and want to know the reason why. Every discharge and every cut is a small boom for Butler. The general will reap the benefit of the troubles at the polls.—Detroit Times.

The tariff has paralyzed the industries of the nation, and thousands and tens of thousands of workingmen are idle because of it. If Morrison's bill reducing the tariff had passed, new markets would have been found for American products, and fewer workingmen would have been idle to day. If you want work, vote the democratic ticket. If you want to pauperize American labor vote to uphold the tariff.—Jackson Patriot.

"The true friend of temperance should shun the prohibition party as he would shun a viper, for all its paths go straightway into the camp of the whiskey democracy."—Republican Oregon. The "whiskey democracy" meant such bad fellows after all. They will be willing to clear now paths for all new comers, and if they prove decent and respectable folks, will raise them in chivvrilly. They have done a vast deal of pioneer work in their day; in fact, they make up the great pioneer party of the country around which cluster so many pleasant memories of useful and patriotic work done for the republic. When the prohibition party was quite little, the "whiskey democracy" passed a prohibitory law. The "God and Morality" party repealed it as soon as it came into power, being unwilling to let the little shaver have one single chance for a life.—Ed.

The steamship Australasia, said to be the largest wooden vessel ever built, was launched Sept. 23, from Grant's mill's shipyard, Bay City. The arrangement is a double decker, with three full decks. Her dimensions are: Extreme length, 295 feet; length of keel, 280 feet; breadth of beam, 40 feet; depth of hold, 22 feet; depth of keel, 12 feet; distance between decks, 7 feet. Two iron bulk 10 inches wide and a half inch thick amidship converges like frame work on the inside and outside near the upper deck. Similar iron straps run longitudinally from the vessel's sides, forming the frame work. The engine is a bore and aft compound, with a 42 inch stroke. This is said to be the largest engine on the lakes. There are two decks, each 27 feet long. The shaft is 11 inches in diameter and carries a 12 foot wheel. It is estimated that the vessel will carry 2,000,000 feet of lumber, or 100,000 bushels of wheat.

COMMUNICATION.

Charlevoix, Sept. 8, 1884.

Editor Journal.—Seeing an article in the Sentinel, directed to prohibitionists, asking of they had studied the clause of Cleveland's letter of acceptance which deals with the tariff question, I, although not a prohibitionist, have only to say that I have read, with care, the letter referred to, and I am free to say that I do not approve of the position taken by Mr. Cleveland on the tariff question. Capt. A. M. Elliott, of schooner Morning Star, is very sick with fever, and is at Frank Shainbut's under the care of Dr. J. A. Carlton.

Jas. Bartlett will address the people on political issues at Lewis hall next Saturday. Mr. Bartlett is an enthusiastic Butler organizer.

Outside of any hustle a railroad company would probably get by running a road to this place and Charlevoix, there would be an immense amount of freight during the entire year, and the passenger traffic would be very large. Elk Rapids needs a railroad much more than Charlevoix, but both towns are positively pining for a railroad. Elk Rapids Review.

H. C. Dolph, representing Cherrie & Co., bought the Florence furnace at the sheriff's sale last week, paying for the furnace, and the buildings connected with it, $26,664.09. The Mining News, from which we obtain the facts, does not give any intimation of what is to be done with the property.—Mining Journal.

The Right Rev. Geo. D. Gillespie, D. D., Bishop of Western Michigan, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Loveday from Saturday to Monday last. The home of the Lovedays has been one of the liveliest places in town this season, they having entertained over twenty of their friends and relatives, most of whom were from Chicago.

Geo. W. Childs, formerly of U. S. hotel, Boyne, has leased the Occidental Hotel, and will take possession this week. He will remove the bar from the house, converting the rooms on the north side into private rooms for his family. Mr. Childs is an experienced landlord and will no doubt place this house among the first-class hotels in northern Michigan.

☞J. A. Smith, M. D., specialist, will be at Bridge street hotel, at Charlevoix, on the 11th and 12th of September, also at East Jordan the 13th, 14th, and 15th; also at Bridge street hotel, 16th and 17th of September. He can be consulted for the few days he will remain in town, on all chronic and private diseases. Special attention paid to female diseases.

It would be an excellent scheme for the live young men here to organize a boat club, and prepare to contest for some of the prizes offered by rowing associations. It might be the means of getting a regatta here, which would bring thousands of people to the town. A better place for rowing would be hard to find, as we have smooth water, no matter how hard the wind blows, or from what direction.

Mr. W. E. Osborn, of the Antwerp, O., Argus, Gen. Rather, of Tuscumbia, Ala., Col. James, of Montgomery, and R. L. Lambert, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., accompanied the excursion party to Boyne on the Friant last Friday, and stopped in Charlevoix a few minutes on her return. They were delighted with the place, and never having been here before, did not know we had so much of a town, although they have been Petoskey several seasons. The impression had been given that there was nothing here worth seeing.

Vanderbilt seems to be booming the narrow gauge railroad project between that place and Bay Springs. As a meeting held there Aug. 30, the committee appointed to look up a route, reported they had been over the ground and found that a line can be run from Vanderbilt to Thumb Lake thence to Boyne Falls, with but very little grading. The matter of bonding the several towns for the purpose of building the road was talked over. The proposition is to bond the towns, and the towns own the stock. W. A. Simons was elected permanent chairman, and Geo. H. Miles permanent secretary, to act with the committees in working up the matter throughout the several towns. The meeting was adjourned till Saturday evening Sept. 13th.

Moonlight Excursions.

During the bright pleasant evenings of the last full moon, Capt. Johnson, of the Queen of the Lakes, has been giving a series of moonlight excursions up Pine lake, which were very enjoyable. The Queen is an excellent boat for this purpose, and her jolly captain puts everybody at their ease. Music and dancing is occasionally a part of the program. Last Saturday he introduced a new and pleasant feature by going to Ironton, arriving in time to see the cast at the furnace at 9 o'clock, which was a rare sight to many of the party. Another season the captain hopes to make these excursions a popular and profitable feature of his business.

Base Ball.

The Boyne base ball club came and played with Charlevoix on Thursday. The playing was interlarded with unusual good feeling among the players, and was witnessed by a large number of our citizens. The following is the score:

Innings.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	Total.
Boyne	0	0	1	0	1	1	0	1	0	4
Charlevoix	2	1	0	3	1	2	5	5	*	20

It is understood that another game will be played in Boyne in the near future.

New Church.

The corner stone of the first Congregational church, at Central Lake, was laid Tuesday afternoon, Sept. 2. The exercises were conducted by the pastor, Rev. T. P. Wilcox, and the address by Rev. C. F. Van Auken, of Charlevoix. It is said to have been the largest assemblage of people ever in Central lake, and was attended by the band, good time,plans bodies, and many of the order as of Bellaire.

MR. BLAINE'S RECORD.

Terrible Republican Indictment of the Presidential Candidate.

After Pledging His Word of Honor to Mulligan, Blaine Broke His Pledge.

The Story of His Railway Transactions and the Mulligan Letters.

Other Jobbery of the Republican Candidate for the Presidency.

Two months ago the New York Evening Post printed avalin and serious review of Mr. Blaine's railroad transactions, which were prefaced by the announcement that this reappearance as a candidate for the highest office in the government, or any other, was considered "an audacious proceeding, which can only be accounted for by supposing him to have an extraordinary and unwarrantable confidence in the popular forgetfulness."

The first of these charges which, in the opinion of the Post, Mr. Blaine will have to answer if he become he can be elected to the Presidency, is this: in the spring of 1868 a bill to renew the land grant to the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad, of Arkansas, was before the House of Representatives. An attempt to beat the bill on the ground that was on the point at least successful when Mr. Blaine, then Speaker, sent a message to him, begging to make the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the purpose of the bill. This point of order was instantly sustained by the Speaker himself, and the bill was defeated. Mr. Blaine at once went to the floor of the House, calling attention to the service he had rendered in defeating the bill, after some opposition received from Mr. Stevens, a friend, his appointment as selling agent for Maine of the bonds of the road, on commission, had resolved a number of such bonds as his percentage. The leading features of this transaction appeared in two letters of his, afterward made public, dated respectively June 25 and the 1, 1868. These changes, the Post contends, were simply preceded by the actions subsequently taken by the Congressional committee, though Mr. Blaine insisted on the floor of the House that the bonds he received were bought by him at precisely the same rates as other bonds.

Mr. BLAINE'S LETTER TO HIS WIFE DATED.

Another charge, repeated in the Post, represents that Mr. Blaine in 1865 made an offer to the owners of the Portland, Saco and Portsmouth Railroad, in which one half of a twenty-month note for $75,000 was to be paid in cash, and at the time of the offer Portland Dodge, Mr. Blaine's brother-in-law, made a $25,000 loan to Mr. Blaine. Soon after the Messrs. Dodge had failed in their business transactions for the past eight years have not passed with as any full appreciation. What I wrote on the 25th was intended to bring Call well to a definite proposition. That was all. I go to Boston for the same train that carries this letter, and will call at your office at 12 m. If you don't happen to be in, no matter; don't put yourself to any trouble about it. J. H. B.

"Hon. J. Fisher, Jr."

Mr. Blaine was then proposing to assign his contract to Caldwell, but did not readily do so till September following. Mr. Blaine waited all summer for a definite proposition" from Caldwell, but none came, so he proceeded to settle his memory and Fisher as follows:

AUGUSTA, Me., Oct. 1, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I spoke to you a short time ago about a railroad interest in which I am personally concerned. It was on the last session of Congress. It was on the last day of the session, when the bill renewing the land grant to the State of Arkansas to the Little Rock and Fort Smith was reached. Julian, of Indiana, Chairman of the Public Lands Committee, had it in charge. He was on the floor, attempted to put in the bill as an amendment to the Pension bill. I made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the subject matter of the bill. The point of order was sustained by the Speaker himself, and the bill was defeated. My interest was in the bonds of the road, on commission, and had resolved a number of such bonds as his percentage. The leading features of this transaction appeared in two letters of his, afterward made public, dated respectively June 25 and the 1, 1868. These changes, the Post contends, were simply preceded by the actions subsequently taken by the Congressional committee, though Mr. Blaine insisted on the floor of the House that the bonds he received were bought by him at precisely the same rates as other bonds.

The next charge specified Mr. Blaine "obtained certain bonds on which Congress was asked to vote a subsidy." The case was a most extraordinary one. Nothing more remarkable in the history of legislation. Mr. Blaine, who was the paper and bonds engaged to secure the subsidy, was the very man to whom the Speaker's duty required him to look for impartial action. He was the man who, as Speaker, decided the Little Rock bill out of order, and who, as Speaker, had declared that the bonds he received were bought by him at precisely the same rates as other bonds. Mr. Blaine's denial that he had any interest in the matter is met by the statement that he actually received $64,000 in bonds, and that he

HICKS PASHA.

A Brief Record of an Exceedingly Eventful Career.

The name of Hicks Pasha figuring so often in the dispatches from Egypt has become a familiar one and his massacre a short time ago caused many inquiries as to his identity, it being known that he was not a native of the land he died in. It has often been said that he was an American, and the Fort Wayne Gazette gave a long account of the career of this remarkable man. It is stated that Hicks Pasha is and was none other than one C. Carroll Hicks, who was "everything by turns and nothing long" actor, soldier, lawyer, and business man. In 1863 he visited Fort Wayne with a theatrical troupe, in which his wife appeared as "Mozeppa." A long and disastrous experience of barn-storming culminated there, and most of the members had to count the back to the centres of country where talent was appreciated. Hicks and his wife settled in Fort Wayne and there his history became known. And it was a "strange, eventful history." Graduating from the United States naval academy, he worked at odd things, and when the war broke out was in the service of the Spanish and Persian governments.

He took sides with the confederacy in the struggle, being a South Carolinian by birth. He was commissioned to the naval service of the confederacy, and made things lively for union craft upon the high seas. In one expedition he failed and was captured and taken to port. At Brooklyn he was tried for piracy and sentenced to be hanged. It was decided, however, about that time that, according to the law of nations, the confederate privateers were not pirates and the sentence was revoked. Then he started on his theatrical career.

When the company landed in Fort Wayne, and the utmost endeavors on the part of the treasurer would not make the ghost walk, he met Mr. F. A. C. MacManus, who was then city editor of the Gazette, but who is now a lawyer in this city and a lively member of the house of delegates. They started a law office, but after some experience found that young lawyers without income could not stand the strain of looking for clients who never came, and at last their rusty shingle came down, and the firm dissolved by mutual consent and the force of circumstances.

He then procured employment as a traveling salesman, and made a success as one of the most innocent men in the world. He violated all his previous principles and saved money, and then started with his wife for New York. He went to Spain, leaving his wife behind him in America, and in the Cuban troubles carried himself with honors in the Spanish army. Then he entered the service of Turkey and went through the Turco-Russian war without gaining any titles. Returning to New York, he remained but a short time, and then proceeded to Egypt, where he remained ever since, and where he received the title of pasha—one of importance and honor.

Mr. F. A. MacManus was sitting in his chair, the other evening, when a reporter called on him and asked him what he knew of Hicks Pasha.

The story as given above was told Mr. MacManus, and he seemed at first rather surprised. He said:

"Of course I can't say as to the literal truth that C. Carroll Hicks, of Fort Wayne, my old partner, is identical with Hicks Pasha, but I would not be in the least surprised if that account should prove true. He was a talented fellow, of good appearance and graceful carriage, but his chief propensity was to take untruths.

"Are the facts as stated concerning his career true?"

"No. The paper is in error in giving Hicks' birthplace as North Carolina. He was born in Georgia. He was one of the most agreeable conversationalists I ever met—in fact, a real high-toned southern gentleman in every sense of the word. There are some details of his history which are not given. He was with Garibaldi in Italy, and followed Walker in his expedition. I could tell you a hundred tales of his career which would make interesting reading, but I have no time."—St. Louis Republican.

Libraries.

The National Library may indeed be called the great brain bottle of the American people. But the bottle is already too full. The library was made to accommodate 300,000 volumes, and there are already 363,441 books piled in it one above another, and over 170,000 pamphlets are stored away in the crypt. After the work on the new building is commenced, says Architect Smithmeyer, it will require five years to complete it, and in that time at the present rate of increase our National Library will have approximated a million of volumes. Asked as it is by the copyright tax it will always be the largest and best library in the United States, and it will soon compete with those of Europe. There are now five bigger libraries in the world, viz.: The national library of France, with 2,500,000 volumes; the Library of the British Museum at London, 1,500,000; the Royal Public Library at St. Petersburg, 1,000,000, and the Royal Library at Berlin, 700,000.

The first library in the United States was the Harvard College library, started in 1638, while that of Yale College was started in A. D. 1700. Thirty-one years later Ben Franklin, having walked from New York to Philadelphia and started a printing office there, originated the first subscription library of America, and in 1800, when our Capitol was removed to Washington, the Library of Congress or our National Library was founded. When the British came here in 1814, they burned it and Congress bought Jefferson's library of 7,000 volumes as a second beginning. By 1851 the library had increased to 55,000 volumes, when it was again destroyed by fire, only 20,000 volumes being saved. Since that time the library has steadily grown, having nearly doubled in size within the past ten years.

In 1870 there were estimated to be 50,000,000 books in the libraries of the United States and 20,000,000 of these were in public libraries. This gives an average of over one book per person, as there were 38,000,000 people in the United States by the same census.

The German nations have the most books in their libraries, and there are over a thousand public libraries in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, twenty of which contain over 100,000 volumes. Great Britain has only nine libraries containing over 100,000 volumes, but the British Museum pays out $80,000 annually to improve its collection. France has six libraries of over 100,000 books outside of the National Library, which is the largest in the world, and Spain has, all told, thirty public libraries containing in all 700,000 volumes, of which 225,000 are in the library at Madrid.—Cleveland Leader.

America Criticised.

An English writer in the London World thus gives his view of the aspect of life in the United States: What is simply the plutocratic spirit here becomes the blind devotion to Mammon there. In England wealth goes for a good deal. In America Wordsworth's line, "The wise man among us is the best," is literally true. In London we are tolerably fond of display, but the splendor of Belgravia or Mayfair is complacently eclipsed by the aggressively ostentatious prodigality of New York. The life of American towns of any pretensions is infected by the most flagrant vices, while it may present some of the idiosyncrasies morals of old and new civilizations. Corruption and magnificence go hand in hand. Side by side with moral depravity there is a glittering and shameless cynicism, a boundless profusion and an illimitable cupidity. Imagine the mingled fervor and contempt with which the simple, God-fearing Washington would have gazed upon the grasp of carpet-baggers, speculators, libertines, lobbyists, millionaires, who are the chief personages in America society to-day. Washington was the father of American independence, and is this sense the father of a great nation but he may also be said to have laid the foundation-stone of a vast human hot-house. He could not foresee the vast rapidity of growth which would mark the stock it contains —the more than tropical luxuriance of the foliage, the monstrous dimensions to which soullessness and unworthiness, beauty and deformity, vice and virtue, would both be carried. Libya, writes Tacitus, is always producing something new. What Africa was in the days of the historian, America is now. It is the region of portents and prodigies, of big brains and gigantic frauds, of "rings" of terrific girth, and of motives and actions of extraordinary littleness; of enterprises exceeding the dreams of Asiatic potentates, and of vice and misery unspeakable; of monstrous births, two-headed nightingales, appalling twins, giants, pigmies, bearded women, and all of the other abominations which can claim kindred with humanity.

The polite and traveled American, as we meet with him in the best society of London or Paris, is a simpering dandy or an effete buck. He is a collector of artistic gems, of bric-a-brac, of pictures; he affects an inordinate love of Venice; he writes the dainty English of the new æsthetic school; he finds Thackeray and Dickens too full-flavored to suit his taste; and—as the weak-headed academic exquisite, heaves a sigh of disgust at the very idea of commonroom port, and can drink only the lightest of Rhenish wine, largely tempered by Apollinaris—he protests feebly that the purity of his taste is such that he can enjoy nothing inferior. Mr. Henry James or Mr. W. D. Howells, his mincing manner reproduces the inanities and affections of all the countries of which he has had experience. His twang is his own; his bearing and presence are a compromise between the Paris mnscadin and the London masher. Yet, though he may devote his existence to wandering over the European world, he is seldom able to divest himself of an innate provincialism.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

Ninth District Congressman.

Last Wednesday, Sept. 10th, the conventions of the democrats, greenbackers and labor party were held at Ludington, to nominate candidates for congress. The democrats invited both of the other parties to a joint convention, and after many conferences and arrangement of details a joint convention was held, with H. J. Hoyt, of Muskegon, as chairman, the agreement being that three quarters of the total vote should nominate and each party should cast the same number of votes. The first two ballots brought out a dozen candidates representing every conceivable idea and ism. L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, and J. B. Goodsell, of Ludington, were the leading candidates. A prolonged struggle seemed inevitable, and at midnight Judge S. S. Fallas, of Wexford county, was brought forward as a dark horse. It succeeded, and on the second ballot after he was presented he received more than the three-quarters vote, and was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

Judge Fallas, who lives in Cadillac was elected prosecuting attorney of Wexford county, in 1872, and in April, 1882, was appointed judge of the twenty-eighth circuit (comprising the counties of Kalkaska, Missaukee, Roscommon and Wexford) by Governor Jerome. He was unanimously nominated for his own successor by the bar of the circuit, and in November, 1882, he was elected by 628 majority over the republican candidate. The counties in the circuit gave a majority of 400 for Governor Jerome. Judge Fallas' own county gave him a majority of 712, although it gave an average republican majority of over 300.

The counties comprising the ninth congressional district of Michigan in 1880 gave Garfield a majority of 4,700 over both Hancock and Weaver combined. But in no section of the state was there greater political revolution during the next two years than that which occurred in the ninth district. It is true that Cutcheon carried it for congress by a majority of 2,632; but Begole had a majority over Jerome at the same election of 266 in a total vote in the district, which was but a few hundred smaller than that cast at the presidential election. Again in 1883, in an unusually heavy vote for a spring election, there was a republican plurality in the district on the vote for justice of the supreme court of less than 600, and the republicans were in an absolute minority in the district of upwards of 1,200, the prohibition vote being heavy.

Republican Prospects.

The republicans in Michigan have fallen upon hard times. Under any ordinary or moderately adverse circumstances the state could not be counted as sure to give its electoral vote to Blaine. But the circumstances of the situation are not ordinary, they are in fact, the very worst for the radical party that could possibly be constructed out of the political elements there existing. The complete fusion of the democrats and greenbackers on their state and electoral ticket make it necessary to call upon the whole republican reserve strength to meet the united opposition. The nomination by the republicans of Alger, a pine land monopolist, for governor, has weakened the ticket and causes uneasiness among the party workers. An even more serious blow is the nomination of David Preston as the prohibition candidate for governor. Preston is no politician, but he is a man of large means, a generous giver to all worthy charitable and religious projects, universally known and respected through out the state, an earnest republican for many years, but distinguished more than anything else for personal humility and piety. In 1872, the bank of which he has been the head for a generation suspended payment. Preston issued a proclamation declaring that with the help of Jesus Christ he would pay every dollar the bank owed. The ungodly laughed and jeered, but the bank did resume, pay all its debts and continue in business more profitable than ever before. He is, without doubt, the most influential lay member of the Methodist Episcopal church in the state and will poll a much larger vote than any other man the prohibitionists could have nominated, four fifths of which will come from the republican party. The moment his name was mentioned for the position, hundreds of his old republican friends besought him to decline. To get rid of them he published a letter saying he would accept if nominated, because the prohibition party was the only one that recognized God in its platform. There may be wiser men than Mr. Preston, but there are few if any whose candidacy could make more trouble for the republicans.—Cleveland Penny Press

How Blaine Dodged.

Fifteen minutes after the ladies had gone from the first ward polls, Mr. Blaine with his son Walter and two or three visiting friends, came down to the polls. No women were present to offer Mr. Blaine a "Yes" ballot. He walked with great solemnity, not speaking to a soul in the house, not even casting a look of recognition at anybody, put a ballot for the republican ticket in the box, then turned on his heel and walked out as solemly as he had walked in. He looked almost as white as his hat. When he returned to go without having put either a "yes" or "no" ballot in the box there was an audible chuckle in the crowd, and somebody said aloud, "Yes, afraid to face the music." "Yes Mr. Blaine shirked the prohibitory vote." He did not go away from home to do it, but did it right at the voting precinct of his own ward, and his friends helped him out by sending the women home. —New York World, Sept. 9th.

Fear a Democratic Victory.

Some of the protection organs, desperate at the terrible situation of the labor market with the tariff still untouched, have undertaken to explain the trouble by attributing the dullness to the fear of democratic success and the reduction of the tariff.

These explanations are found side by side with absolute assurances that the political conflict has been settled from the beginning; that Blaine's nomination was of itself a proclamation of victory; that the democrats had never the slightest hope of electing their candidates; that "the people" are laughing at them for even pretending to a serious contest; that the party is demanding the withdrawal of Cleveland, and that from the start the campaign has been "a walk over" for the republicans. How, then can the fear of democratic success close two or three factories a day and set thousands of workmen adrift every week.—Free Press.

Why we Boycott Blaine.

The candidate of the republican party seems to be peculiarly unfortunate in the selection of the newspapers which advocate his election. If you scratch a Blaine organ you will surely discover a rat sheet. Every one of the leading newspapers which support his candidacy refuses to pay a fair day's wages for a fair day's work, and every one of them is a bitter and unrelenting foe of organized labor, and seizes upon every opportunity to insult it. Greenback Senatorial Convention.

A greenback senatorial convention, to nominate a candidate for state senator for the 34th senatorial district will be held at Traverse City, at one o'clock p. m., Wednesday, October 8, 1884. The several counties in the district are requested to send delegates as follows: Antrim, 2; Benzie, 2; Charlevoix, 3; Emmet, 3; Grand Traverse, 5; Kalkaska, 2; Leelanau, 2; Missaukee, 1; Manistee, 3.

H. M. SPENCER, Chairman.

Gen. Cutcheon's Speech.

At the opera house last night, Gen. B. M. Cutcheon, republican candidate for congress for this district, undertook to bring back into the ranks those who have wandered away from the old party. He premised a eulogy on the life of Gen. Butler, at the same time counting him out of the contest by changing that every vote cast for him is a vote for Grover Cleveland. The fusion ticket in this State is a sham in republican flesh, and every more thinks it deeper. On the lines of that combination every vote for Butler counts in the proportion of electors. Butler is a grand, good man, but in the opinion of the speaker is only Cleveland's assistant.

Democratic votes were exhausted not to divide their strength. There are enough in the state to make a respectable party, if united, but divided can only defeat themselves. Lucy, how are them wheels, they covers a common sense, unprejudiced people and not a party that has recently become disgusted.

The laws of Blaine and Cleveland were contrasted from the republican standpoint, and a score of big things were declared to have been done, almost which have taken from 1776 to 1861. Not a word was said about that little enterprise of which the Lincoln party took unto itself a monopoly, and which in the last analysis of events proved to be a success.

As Cleveland had no record in the presidency, he could not be charged with any political crimes. He had been a democratic governor of New York, but that party had no more responsibility for the acts of governors of the states than the republican party had for those of governors of Ohio, Iowa, Kansas or Michigan. The democratic party of to-day is not the republican party that was, when Lincoln was president. As Grant and his lieutenants came the republican party became a band of partisan hacks, a political machine and a party of plunder, managed by adventurers and conducted solely as a means of success. The democratic party of to-day is not the democratic party of 1861. Its leaders, however, were not responsible for party acts, and are not responsible for those of its predecessor. The democratic party of to-day is not responsible for the acts of the republican party of to-day, and is not responsible for the acts of the republican party of 1861. But the republican party is responsible for the acts of the democratic party of 1861. But the republican party is not responsible for the acts of the democratic party of to-day. In the name of the democratic party of to-day, although a personal friend of Mr. Cleveland, he could not give his approval to the acts of governors and established precedents of democratic governors, and would not be willing to be held responsible for the acts of governors of Ohio, Iowa, Kansas or Michigan. He could not give his approval to the acts of governors and established precedents of democratic governors, and would not be willing to be held responsible for the acts of governors of Ohio, Iowa, Kansas or Michigan.

GOV. HENDRICKS.

The Next Vice-President on the Political Issues of the Day.

Cogent Reasons Why There Ought to Be a Change in the Control of Public Affairs.

One hundred campaign speeches were delivered on Saturday, Aug. 30, in Indiana cities, where both parties formally opened the campaign. Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks addressed a vast open air assemblage at Indianapolis. He said:

Fellow-citizens, I appreciate the privilege and the honor of addressing you, and I recognize the duty of speaking frankly and without reserve or concealment of opinion upon matters of fact or opinion. May I ask your attention to some considerations which have occurred to me, and which I regard as of public interest to-day? Some of the questions now attracting the public attention are of a character which I have not been responsible for the discussion of. The questions which I propose to mention are those which have been presented by the opposite party. I shall not be drawn into any controversy which may be raised by the discussion of these questions. I shall not be provoked to any personal controversy. I shall not be tempted to any unkind word. I shall not be led into any bitterness of feeling. I shall not be induced to say anything which I would not say in the presence of a lady. I shall not be induced to say anything which I would not say in the presence of a lady. I shall not be induced to say anything which I would not say in the presence of a lady

Mr. Peter Kane raised 87 bushels of oats from one acre this year.

Blaine's majority in Hayes will be best represented thusly: 000,000.

The farmers in Hayes have commenced sowing their winter wheat.

Miss Adelaide Lewis left Monday for Olivet college, to be absent three years.

The Sentinel is rather soon in its assertion about certain citizens of Hayes voting for Blaine.

There is to be a meeting of the school board at Gibson school house Thursday, Sept. 18th, to hear petition for the formation of a new school district.

Some of the gallant Hayesites want to be a little more particular when they are waiting upon other men's wives, especially when they assist them to alight from their carriages.

Tin wedding—Mr. and Mrs. Frank and Ella Kane, celebrated the tenth universary of their married life, Sept. 25th, and all who were present had a most enjoyable time. Owing to the almost continuous rain, but few of their many friends were present.

There was quite a large gathering at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. S. Webster, Sept. 7th, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Miss Lottie, to Morell Long, of Evangeline. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. F. Van Anken. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller and several other friends from the Bridge street house, who in token of their esteem presented the bride with a nice set of dishes, which, with the presents from other friends made a fine array.

Freeman Wilson has a young heir.

Mr. Green and sister, Mrs. Covey, spent last week at Central Lake with relatives.

Rev. Richard Tyndall has gone to Lansing to attend the M. E. conference convened there.

S. G. Isaman who has the contract for making the new state road, is pushing it forward rapidly.

Prayer meeting on Thursday evening was well attended, and a lively interest shown by those present.

Mr. S. Fisher, a traveling Jew from Traverse City, spent Saturday and Sunday at J. R. Vance's recently.

Messrs. Bipp, Lamway and Thomson have their new threshing machine in running order and are now doing good business.

Elder Blake spent Sunday, Sept. 7, at Ironton, and preached in East Jordan on Sept. 14, while Elder Sparks occupied the pulpit in the evening.

At the annual school meeting, H. B. Stolmann was chosen his own successor, as assessor of their district; also permission given the church going people to preserve a key for their use, which privilege has been gladly availed of.

Now is the time when the festive fly flieth (yea, even lightly), while the resorter sweareth, the small (?) boy batteth, the threshing machine bloometh, the excursionist cometh, and all mature rejoiceth in the beauti ful sun that shineth.

Ironton.

The steam barge will start out this week. The captain expected on Monday.

Business in Ironton has started up. A load of iron ore came in Friday, the vessel will take back a load of pig iron.

Mr. C. H. Webster has been employed to teach the Ironton school, as principal. School will commence the first of October.

As to the loyal republican of Ironton; he was caught in one battle, and had his arms taken from him, and paroled and bound not to take up arms again. He has proved loyal to that.

The editor of the Sentinel feels very bad over the unmanly demerants of Ironton, and well he may, for republican county officers will be as scarce as hens teeth, this fall in Charlevoix.

A STRANGE VISITOR.

She was such a dainty little old lady, with her sad, delicate, haughty face, her snow-white hair, her black glancing eyes, bright as stars.

The child was a mere baby, not more than three or four years old. She had on a white frock and tiny scarlet shoes, but wore neither cape nor hat.

Madame Van Dyck started violently at sight of her standing there so suddenly, as if she might have dropped from the ceiling. Then she said softly:

"Who are you, little one? Where have you come from?"

The baby eyes met madame's fearlessly.

"Pease, I's Dada," she said gravely, pushing a cloud of yellow curls off her face with both hands.

Madame's cold eyes softened. She almost smiled as she extended her white and jewelled hand, saying gently:

"Come and kiss me, darling."

The little one hovered on tiptoe a moment, half turned away, like a bird poising for flight, and then as the lady took a step toward her, darted off, as if winged really.

Madame followed quickly, but by the time she reached the door her small visitor had vanished, and though she summoned her servants and caused instant and thorough search to be made, the child could not be found.

A day or two after the stately lady was in her conservatory.

Suddenly, from somewhere near, sounded a childish voice.

"I'll tiss oo now if oo'll dive I some fowers."

Turning quickly, madame saw a cherub head parting the branching leaves of a tall white lily just beside her.

She had not heard a sound till then, and there was the strange child again.

Madame put her hand to her side.

"Oh," she murmured, in an accent of mingled pain and fright, "it is Laura's face over again—Laura's very face."

The child stood still, looking at her with her lovely shining eyes, her small hands fluttering like the two wings of a bird.

Suddenly madame caught her in her arms and kissed her with such fervor, and hugged her so tightly, that the little child cried out sharply:

"Dada 'frait. Put Dada down this moment."

But she did not cry, as Madame Van Dyck noticed approvingly.

"Won't you run away again if I put you down?"

"Put Dada down," repeated the child imperiously.

Madame obeyed, laughing as she had not done for years.

"Now, you small mystery," she said, as she set her upon her feet, "what next?"

The child held up the short skirt of her gaily embroidered dress in her wee fingers.

"Dada want fowers now. Dada want a bushel of fowers."

Madame proceeded at once to cut as nearly a bushel of her choicest blossoms as her tiny skirt would hold, taking whichever ones Dada herself ordered with the baby imperiousness of a thoroughly spoiled child.

"She is Laura over again—just Laura over again," madame kept repeating to herself, with lips that trembled a little. "I can't imagine where she comes from. But she sha'n't escape this time as she did before."

She was boasting at this moment over a bed of violets, carefully culling the largest and sweetest. When she turned round, with her hands full, her small visitor was no where to be seen.

At first madame thought she must be hiding among the plants; but she could not find her. Then she went quickly to the nearest door—one opening into the parlors—and searched there thoroughly herself.

Afterwards she questioned the servants again; but as before, no one had seen any child—no one but madame.

Madame Van Dyck was the widow of a very rich man, whom she had married late in life without loving. Five years after, he died, leaving her all his property; for he had loved her.

There was one child—a little girl—whom madame adored with an absolute idolatry. The child was very lovely, very warm-hearted, very self-willed, and was never denied the smallest whim, except one.

She could not be with a handsome young man when she was seventeen, and madame ordered him to leave her house, and never enter it again.

The end of it was that Laura Van Dyck, in a rash and angry moment, ran away with her lover, and married him.

The two had never met since.

"If she would only write and ask me to forgive her," the poor mother had thought in bitter pain, "I would do it. But she don't care for me anymore."

The proud, hurt woman never asked after her child; never sought to know whether she lived or died; but what her heart desertion had been to her you might read in her white hair. She was a miserable unhappy creature in all her pomp and stateliness.

Once more the mysterious child with the cherub head and birdlike voice and movement came to Madame Van Dyck.

She had been ill for several weeks, and was only now able to sit up. All through her sickness the thought of the child had haunted her; and partly because she could hear nothing of her, partly, perhaps, because she was sick and nervous, she began to have strange fancies about her.

"She was so like Laura when she was little," she thought, "and no one ever saw her but me. It was very strange."

And then, as madame sat there alone her door opened a little, and there a little more, and the child she was thinking of came softly into the room.

She was dressed in some kind of a pale blue fleecy material, which looked as if it might have been cut from a cloud in the sky, and her floating golden hair surrounded her head like a halo.

"Laura's face, Laura's dress that I keep locked in a drawer in this room. Oh, what can it mean?" madame muttered.

"Dada love oo," the child cooed, laying her velvet cheek against the cold fingers that were clutched upon the arm of madam's chair.

Madame Van Dyck suddenly leaned forward.

"In Heaven's name, who are you, child?" she cried out wildly.

That moment the door opened again, and a figure entered that was like a magnified Dada, face, dress, loving eyes and all.

"Laura!" screamed Madame Van Dyck. "Have you come back to me?"

"Oh, mother!" cried Laura, and then the two women were sobbing in each other's arms.

I should have come before if I had thought you would let me," Laura said crying. "But you never answered any of my letters, and when you sent them back without even opening them, I did not dare to come myself."

"Letters!" exclaimed Madame Van Dyck. "I don't know what you mean. I have never had a line from you since you left me for that man."

"I wrote you several times. The letters were always returned unopened. I can show them to you."

Madame's housekeeper was summoned.

She turned white at sight of her mistress' daughter, and confessed to everything.

She had stopped the letters herself, and sent them back, thinking that she could rob her mistress with more impunity as long as she could keep her daughter from her.

"Mother," said Laura suddenly, "look at that child."

Dada had climbed upon a chair, taken out a handkerchief, exactly two inches and a half square, and was composedly and quietly crying all by herself.

"What are you crying about, dear?" asked her mother.

No answer.

"What is the matter, darling?" Laura asked again.

"Dada kying about dose letters too."

Madame Van Dyck laughed aloud.

Upon which the quaint little creature gravely put her handkerchief in her pocket again, got down from her seat, and began to laugh too.

"It is strange I never thought of her being your child, Laura," said madame. "She is so like you."

"So everyone says. I thought you would guess who she was at once, and I hoped the sight of her would soften your heart towards me. I brought her here myself. I had a key to that little door from the rose garden, and I knew the house so well I kept out of the servants' sight very easily. I have been in here a good many times since you have been sick. I watched my chance when you were asleep, and your nurse either asleep or out of the room. Once I got your keys, opened a drawer, and took out that little blue dress. I thought you would certainly guess who Dada was when you saw that on her. Her name is not Dada, you know. It is Hilda, after you. But that is the nearest she can come to saying it."

"You talked just like her when you were little. Where is that man?"

"Now, mother, don't call him 'that man.' Fred is not very far away, you may be sure. We live only a few streets off. When may we come and see you?"

"At once. I forgive him everything on one condition. You are all to come and live here with me. I can't be separated from you again. And if he and I are each careful to mind our own business, we shall be a model mother and son-in-law."

His Expectations.

A Chicago man, who was induced to purchase a large interest in a hole in the ground in Nevada, said to contain silver, went to Virginia City to get some close idea of how matters stood. A professional mine inspector was called in, and, after some talk, he said:

"My charges will be $50 a day, whether I discover anything or not."

"Suppose you discover that half of this mine is worth $100,000?"

"Then you will probably present me with $500."

"And if you should discover that I have paid $18,000 for a half interest in a hole which won't pan out $200—what then?"

"Why, I should then expect the man who sold it to you to present me with at least a thousand!"

John Coyne, of Denver, has ordered a gold-mounted collar for his dog. One night not long since Coyne's house took fire, and being a light sleeper was being rapidly swallowed up. Being a heavy sleeper, he did not hear the crackling flames, and would have been cremated had not his dog burst his kennel open, rushed into his master's room, and pounded him in the face until he wakened up. So narrow was his escape that he had not even time to get his pocketbook from his pillow.

Cleveland's Labor Record.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill passed by a democratic legislature, to allow the people to express their opinion against the competition of convict with honest labor.

Governor Cleveland compelled the last republican legislature, much against its will, to pass a bill in accordance with the wishes of the people so emphatically expressed at the polls last fall, against the continuance of the prison contract system.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to abolish contract child labor in all the state reformatories.

Governor Cleveland approved two bills against tenement house cigar manufacturings.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill making workingmen first creditors for wages in case of the failure of the employer or contractor.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to protect hat makers from convict manufacture.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to protect widows and orphans from swindling insurance corporations.

Governor Cleveland gave his signature to the emigration bill to protect emigrants from extortion and robbery.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to prevent pawnbrokers from robbing the poor and unfortunate.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill for the better protection of those who place their earnings in the saving's bank.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill which provides for the testing of steam boilers, that laboring men might be better protected from accident resulting from the careless indifference of wealthy corporations.

Governor Cleveland asked the last republican legislature to appropriate sufficient funds to allow laboring men to continue work on the Capitol. This the republican legislature refused to do, prefering to squander the state funds on commissions and political investigating committees rather than for the benefit of workingmen.

NOBLE LADIES.

Honor to the noble members
Of the W. C. T. U.
For their prayers, like burning embers
Their revivor cause anew.

For their courage, as undaunted,
They upheld our noble cause,
When the bad rum power vaunted
That they would defy the laws.

Honor to them. In their weakness
They have put the men to shame;
Asking aid, with christian meekness,
In our dear Redeemer's name.

Honor for so nobly striving
Though at first they fail to win!
Gained the men who now are driving
In the work of death and sin.

For their cool unflinching bravery,
Precious men from Satan's thrall,
As they strive to crush out slavery
To the demon Alcohol.

God grant that the time be hastened
When our own dear native land
Shall from rum's cruel curse be chasten
By this noble hearted band!

Their fair hands shall compensated,
For their fervent prayers shall answered be,
And soon this giant Alcohol,
Must leave this land of the noble free!

The Governental Liquor Traffic.

What is the governmental liquor business? It is the more than four-fifths interest of the government in all the spirits distilled in the country. For instance, whiskey is quoted at $1.10 per gallon to-day in the market reports. Of that sum the distiller gets twenty cents and the government ninety cents. It costs the distiller about fourteen cents to manufacture a gallon of whiskey, and it will be seen that his profit is less than 50 per cent. It costs the government about six cents per gallon to secure its lion's share of the price per gallon and it will also be seen that its profit is 1660 per cent. Considered as a partner, the government is a success. Its ability to [illegible] partnership rests upon its ability to abolish the business. The government holds the key of every distillery and distilling warehouse in the land. Every gallon of spirits manufactured in the country is made under the strict superintendence and by co-operation of the government. A man who would engage in the business must first bond over to the government his entire premises, land, buildings and appurtenances thereto. He must build the distillery in accordance with plans approved by the government and submit it to government control when built. The government weighs every bushel of his grain, and locks it up securely after the distiller has paid for it. The government measures it into the tub, knows how much of the manufactured article it will yield, and takes out its profits, not on the exact amount manufactured, but upon the capacity of the distillery. The government watches every step of the distilling process, draws off the finished product and stores it away under its own lock and seal until the distiller can find a customer who will pay both partners their profits and take away the goods. Even here the government steps in and says to the bayer, if he be a dealer in such merchandise, "Pay me $2.60 (if a rectifier of spirits), $150 (if a wholesale dealer), or $25 (if a retail dram seller), or I will seize your property and close out your business." It says to every illicit brewer, distiller, or saloon keeper in prohibitory states, "Pay me my profits, no matter what state laws may require." The governmental partnership in the liquor traffic of the country is to-day the back bone of the traffic. It is worse; its tacit sanction of that by which it benefits so largely, is the benumbing vice-like grip upon the national conscience, which stifles conviction and smothers the agonizing cries of the nation's victims.

But some will say: Is it not better to place the restriction of a heavy tax upon liquors and the traffic in them.

Restriction is only good by as much as it restricts. As a general rule no restriction is of much use save as it may be in the direct line of prohibition, e. g., the prohibition of sale to minors, to drunkards, and on certain days is restrictions which enforced, may be very useful. But a restriction whose active principle is per mission, is not and cannot be, in the nature of things, much hindrance to evil.

Levying a tax of 90 cents on every gallon of spirits is a species of per mission. It is permission after the tax is paid. It is the government's promise to interfere no further. It is not therefore a real restriction. But does it not restrict? Read the revenue reports for the past twenty years. Note the amount collected in 1863, $8,176,570. 60, and then read that only an average tax of 75½ cents through the twenty years, the revenue from distilled spirits has increased nearly 1,500 per cent in that period, the returns for 1883 being about $75,000,000. Does that look like restriction, and is not that sort of restriction just the sort distillers like? Could the free and untrammelled traffic have been worse?

And now is it not patent that a national movement is necessary to dislodge and destroy a national evil? Is it not moreover clear that the government will not reform itself, that it will not condemn that which fattens it.

The government partnership with the liquor traffic is the great legal and moral (?) scaffolding by which that traffic has reared itself into a national institution, and an institution that will inevitably bankrupt and ruin the nation.

Let the people, to whom only government is amenable, and whose creature it is, decide if the national partnership with evil shall be continued.

Hendricks was a passenger, but escaped unharmed. Eight persons were so seriously hurt as to be helpless, while several other received bruises.

SOUTHERN.

Dallas (Tex.) dispatch: W. A. Taylor, the negro who attempted to outrage Mrs. Eppes, is at this city, and who was first taken to Waco under an escort of 100 men, was captured from the officers by a party of armed men and lynched within a mile of this city.

Norman Assessmores, named Willy and Humphreys, who were about to commence operations in Lancaster County, South Carolina, promptly accepted notice from the anti-ku-klux.

A private dispatch received in Louisville announces the arrival in Canada of Foote and Day, indicted for hypothecating false war-bounty receipts.

The boiler of a cotton compress at Indianola, Miss., exploded with such force as to shake the town. The building went to fragments, and four employes were killed.

The cemetery at Conyers, Ga., was invaded at night, the graves desecrated and monuments wrecked. The Methodist Episcopal church was also set on fire and was destroyed. The perpetrator, Tom Marston, who also tried to burn the town, was followed and shot, but averted that and commanded him to commit the outrages.

E. De Bernilla, wine merchant and Italian and Turkish consul at Baltimore, is missing, and owes $20,000.

The remains of Brig. Gen. B. H. Helm, of the Confederate army, who was killed at Chickamauga, have been disinterred at Atlanta and removed to Elizabethtown, Ky. He was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Lincoln.

A child in Baltimore, suffering from diphtheria, recently, coughed infected matter into the face of Dr. Neil the Taylor, the result being the death of the latter.

Henry A. Frelsen, a New Orleans merchant, who, when a subject of Denmark, took an active part in Greece's struggle for freedom, and there became intimate with Lord Byron, has just died at the age of 84.

WASHINGTON.

The Interior Department has orders to dispose of the reservation at Fort Sanders, Wyoming, and the barracks at Baton Rouge, they being no longer useful to the army.

POLITICAL.

A meeting of the Tammany Hall General Committee, called for the purpose of determining what action should be taken in the pending Presidential contest, was held on the evening of Sept. 12. The hall was crowded with spectators. John Kelly called the meeting to order, and ex-Senator Foster was made Chairman. After dwelling upon the ancient history of Tammany Hall, how it has never swerved from its allegiance to the Democratic party nor faltered in its support of the candidates nominated by and in the principles enunciated from the platform of the National Democratic convention, he urged upon the meeting the necessity now before the country that in respect to the candidates now before the Democracy of the nation "We neglect in the office of the ballot-box the representatives of the party, although we believe that will to have been unwisely expressed. There is but one alternative left to us—to cover our contempt with the blanket of silence, and we cannot and will not do so." The address goes on to review some of Gov. Cleveland's vetoes, reviews the contests of the country in past Presidential contests, and the harsh treatment in the Chicago convention, and concludes by declaring that "Democrats, in past years, have been accustomed to see the Democratic party divided, and the harsh treatment in the Chicago convention, and concluded

Democratic County Convention.

Attention is directed to the call for a county convention to be held at Boyne, Thursday, Oct. 9th, to nominate candidates for county officers. Township committees are requested to call their caucuses and nominate as delegates men who can and will act, and see that every such delegate is in attendance. The call is made at Boyne to accommodate the eastern townships so they should respond with full delegations of active men.

Conkling for Butler.

An Albany special on the New York situation says: "The Stalwarts are very angry, and in New York, Utica, and Albany some of them are talking openly for Cleveland. Conkling tells all newspaper reporters that he is out of public life, and has no interest in politics, and has nothing to say. To his friends and acquaintances, however, he talks with the utmost freedom. To one of those he said yesterday that in his judgment both parties had nominated bad and unworthy men. He gave his friend to understand that he would vote for Butler if he voted at all. If he takes any part in politics he will use his influence to direct republicans to vote for Butler.

Land Grants to Corporations.

During his speech last week Congressman Cutcheon raised the question of responsibility for the large grants of land to corporations, and charged that the talk of the public domain was disposed of by the democrats before the republicans came into power. This is not a fact.

Prior to 1862 no grants were made to corporations, but to states, which were held responsible for the work, and in some cases owned the improvements made. The total grants to states will be seen in the following table:

STATES.	Limit Principal or Capital to State	Miles of Railway Completed by Each State	No. Acres Given by Congress to Each State
Alabama	2,882,000	822	2,500
Arkansas	2,205,000	620	3,331
Florida	1,500,000	227	3,136
Illinois	2,500,000	705	3,060
Iowa	4,376,000	1,622	2,943
Kansas	4,440,000	1,054	2,606
Louisiana	1,922,000	757	1,003
Michigan	3,220,000	1,085	3,210
Minnesota	5,740,000	2,300	3,243
Mississippi	935,156	466	2,300
Missouri	1,500,000	705	1,562
Wisconsin	2,867,000	855	5,077
Totals	35,958,775	10,926

Average number of acres of land per mile, 3,290.

Compare with this the grants afterwards made to corporations, when the republicans had full control of the machinery of government, and then say who gave away the bulk of the public domain:

NAMES OF CORPORATIONS.	No. of Miles now Completed	Estimated Num. of Acres Granted.
Kansas Pacific	638	6,000,000
Central Pacific	742	7,987,200
Western Pacific	132	1,920,000
Central Branch of the Union Pacific	300	960,000
Sioux City Pacific	101	693,120
Union Pacific	667	12,800,000
Northern Pacific	1,347	47,275,000
Texas Pacific	2,525	14,000,000
Atlantic and Pacific	1,755	49,241,803
Totals	7,712	129,950,668

By the footings of the above tables it will be seen that under democratic rule less than thirty-six million acres of land built nearly eleven thousand miles of railroad, an average of less than three thousand three hundred acres per mile of road, while under republican rule over one hundred and thirty-nine million acres built less than eight thousand miles of road, an average of over eighteen thousand acres of land to each mile of road.

In the one case the improvements were controlled by the states (by the people themselves), and when forfeited the government demanded their return. In the other case the bounties were given entirely for the benefit and private gain of the members of the corporations.

The republicans dare not defend the system they inaugurated, but undertake by false and evasive statements to prejudice the voters and throw the responsibility on others.

Notes and News.

The Cassopolis Democrat calls Blaine a "doomed knight."

"Burn this."—J. G. Blaine. "Tell the truth."—Grover Cleveland.—Albany Argus.

Would it not be a good plan for the democrats to hire Gen. Cutcheon to make a few more speeches here this fall?

Ex Senator Grady, of New York, will visit Boston with General Butler, and will stump the state in the interest of the people's party.

The Michigan Tradesman has completed its first year, and it is a healthy yearling, too. In appearance its its success has been marvelous.

It is related at Chase that Gen. Cutcheon's republican speech there the other night resulted in converting several republicans out of the party. So the relator says, "I thank God for it."—Evening News.

The republican managers should withdraw Gen. Cutcheon from the canvass. From every meeting come reports of men disgusted, declaring they have always voted the republican ticket but never will again.

The Indiana republican campaign fund is all out, and the committee are several thousand dollars in arrears. All the government employes as well as republicans generally have received a circular inviting them to contribute a reasonable sum toward paying the expenses of the campaign. The five postmasters who were members of the committee have resigned. Blaine's was to have been an aggressive campaign.—G. R. Democrat

Lloyd Brezee has been sold out of the Evening Journal and he will take a place on a weekly in New York. The Journal is now managed by S. J. Tomlinson, an old republican editor, and republican money supports it.

A man of fine sensibilities should not accept the office of sheriff, if he would keep faith with the great republican party, for in the language of congressman Cutcheon, when he executes the law he becomes very coarse and brutal, and unfit to be classed with gentlemen.

It turns out that the money behind the Detroit Evening Journal has been furnished from a source very closely related to U. S. Senator Palmer. This will account for the politics of the sheet. It has been sailing under false colors. It is not independent, but republican.

To Workingmen.

Has not the republican party controlled the national administration for almost twenty four years?

Has it not enacted all the laws during that time.

Has it not executed the laws by men of its choice?

Has the party brought prosperity to you and your families?

Are you working for good wages all the time?

Are there no mills closed?

Are wages not cut down?

Do you find living cheap, rents low, provisions abundant and low priced, clothing and other supplies down to the cut in pay?

How many days have you been idle since last New Year's?

Can you tell when work will be abundant, wages good?

Are business affairs satisfactory to you?

Did not the republican party make business affairs what they are and as bad as they are?

How much more are your wages today than they were four years ago, when this same republican party promised you more pay and more work if you would support its ticket?

Who has grown richer in the last four years of republican policy, you or the men who were rich then and who seek to allure you with the same sort of arguments now?—Albany Argus.

A Harbor Springs man who returned from Chicago last week, reports the city full of buyers, and a feeling among business men he met there that trade was going to be more lively this fall with prospects of a busy winter.

"Hullo, Jones, where are you going?" said Smith, as he met Jones hurrying down the street, with his gripsack in his hand. "Going to take the steamer Gazelle for South Arm, to buy some of those new goods Sol. Isaman has just received."

During the northwest gale the schooner A. B. C. F. M., parted her anchor chain and went ashore at Gill's Pier. She is on rocky bottom. The tug Coe, with steam pumps, left for the wreck on the 18th. The vessel is valued at $4,000. There is no insurance on the vessel or cargo.

☞ Services will be resumed at the M. E. church next Sunday. The sermon salutatory, will be delivered by the pastor in the morning. At the evening service the theme, "How ought we to demean ourselves during the present political canvass." Let all who can, come and enjoy truth abreast the times.

The schooner Alaska sprang a leak and stranded at Scott's Point, twenty miles north of Beuver Island, Tuesday night, Sept. 18th, in a heavy southwesterly gale. She will prove a total loss, as the recent heavy southwesterly gales since have no doubt used her all up. The crew will save all they can. She was laden with ore from Escanaba and was insured for $5,000.

The Harbor Springs Independent has the following concerning Judge S. S. Fallass, nominee for congressman on the union ticket: "No better man could have been found. Mr. Fallass, is well known throughout the entire district. He is one of the most popular men in northern Michigan, and his ability and integrity will win for him thousands of republican votes."

The report of W. R. Strehcomb, presiding elder of the Grand Traverse district, at the annual conference, showed revivals on the following charges: Bellaire, Spencer Creek, Benzonia, Boyne, Cadillac, Cadillac Circuit, Cross Village, Elk Rapids, Frankfort, Petoskey, Traverse City, and at other points. New churches have been erected at Elmira, Inland and Frankfort and dedicated at Fife Lake and Kingsley's. The society at Kalkaska is greatly embarrassed by a heavy church debt. Improvements have been made on church property to the value of $10,000 at Cadillac, Frankfort, Lake City and Muncelona. —Herald.

The traveling correspondent of the Detroit Post has the following to say regarding the village of Eastport, Antrim county: This busy, thriving little town is located right at the head of Torch Lake, a sheet of water which runs parallel with Grand Traverse bay for twenty miles, and is separated by only a narrow strip of land. This town consists of two or three general stores, one drug store, one large mill which runs most of the year, and other shops and places of business. Two fine hotels look out on the lake. A neat school house has been erected and a new church is soon to be built. The population of the town is about 200. The surrounding country is well settled. Water crafts of all kinds ply on Torch lake and a large business is carried on in towing logs, posts, etc., to the various mills located on its banks, as well as a general freight and passenger business. It is a common occurrence to see boats loaded to the water's edge with hemlock bark, telegraph poles, paving blocks, etc., bound for Chicago and other points."

The Nashville Students.

It is not necessary to mention the merits of this excellent troupe to any who ever heard them sing, as a Charlevoix audience heard them last year. They were, by all odds, the best of the season. But for the benefit of those who never heard them, we print the following from the Nashville World: "Fully two thousand people were at the state capitol last night, to listen to the concert tendered by the original Nashville Students to the Tennessee legislature and their friends. It was a charming treat; one that was heartily appreciated and thoroughly enjoyed. It is astonishing what puthos, what soul stirring beauty, dwells in the voice of these black-skinned songsters. By nature they are endowed with the soul of music; by culture this genius has been under perfect control, and for melody, for sweetness of voice, for correct time, for expression of true vocal sentiment, their quaint, weird like refrains brought back to memory visions of the old plantation days, camp-meetings, break-downs, fields and forests of our ante-bellum sunny south. This troupe will be at the opera house next Tuesday, Sept. 30, under the auspices of Baxter post, G. A. R.

Little Traverse Bay Light.

Official notice is received at this port from the office of the lighthouse board at Washington that on and after Sept. 25 inst. a fixed red light of the fourth order will be shown from the lighthouse recently erected at Harbor Point, Little Traverse bay, Mich. The appuratus lights the entire horizon and the focal plane is 41 feet above the lake. The light should be seen in clear weather from the deck of a vessel 10 feet above the lake 12½ statute miles. The structure is a square red brick tower with a red brick dwelling attached and the lantern is painted white. The approximate position of the light house as taken from the lake survey charts is latitude 45 degrees 25 minutes 7 seconds west. The magnetic bearing and distances from prominent objects are as follows: Beaver Island light house, west northwest 31 statute miles; South Fox lighthouse, west ½ south 42 statute miles; Grand Traverse lighthouse, southwest by west ½ west 31 statute miles.—Record.

South Arm.

A very heavy rainstorm visited us on Friday night and was followed by a slight frost on that night and the following.

A boy arrived at A. E. Scofield's on Sunday, Sept. 14th, weighing nearly 10 pounds.

Mr. Robinson and family have moved into S. G. Isaman's farm house.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Vance and children went to Echo on Friday last.

Mr. John Roe spent several days last week at his homestead near Intermediate.

It is rumored that Duvis & Dean are having some trouble with the G. R. & I. R. R. concerning timber taken from the company's lands.

Rev. Richard Tyndall has returned from conference and is visiting friends here before going to his pastoral work at Glen Haven.

A few people from South Arm attended church service at East Jordan and heard Elder Sparks last sermon. He returns to Cincinnati this week for another year's study, before entering upon his ministerial duties. He has many warm friends here who regret his departure, and who hoped he would be induced to remain as pastor.

Rev. P. Blake, formerly M. E. pastor here has declined the work assigned him by the presiding elder, and has accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian church at East Jordan. He carries upon his pastoral labors next Sunday.

Burgess.

The saw mill and broom handle factory at Clarkesburg's was burned last Sunday morning. Loss about $2,000, besides about $300 worth of handles.

W. C. Arnold put in fifteen acres of fall wheat one day last week, had four teams at work.

Charles Arnold finished picking his hops last Wednesday; had fifty at work in his yard.

Moses Cooper and wife were visiting their nephew and neice, Mr. and Mrs. Morel Long, of Evangeline, last Sunday.

If the ladies of Hayes want to have peaceable times they must quit chewing gum nights.

Oh! glistening spike of snow-white bells,
Standing out, pure where the meadgrass falls,
You teach my heart a lesson to-night,
As I see you from this dim old hill.

Your beauty springs from a bed of spikes
Which rudely bristle about your feet;
Your home is but the ruoch roadside,
Yet how could you be more fair, more sweet?

My path, too, lies in a thorny way,
It's—once, the dear are about me now;
You still me to blame its coarse
With bright, brave thoughts and a cheerful brow.

MAUD FLEMING'S REVENGE,

BY H. MARIA GEORGE.

Percy Hamilton was by all odds the handsomest and most dashing man in Aylesville, a fellow something like Oisin's hero, Granville de Vigne, somewhat proud and somewhat vain, with a touch of the old noblesse oblige about him that accorded well with his tall, statuesque figure and his leonine type of beauty. He was 28 years old, and rich, so rich, that he could follow his profession—the law—or let it alone as he chose; and for the most part he chose to let it alone.

Percy had lately returned from a three years' travel in the old world, bearded and bronzed as an Arab, and with the air of a grand prince. The pale, sickly gallants of Aylesville fell back in sad discomfiture at the advent of the gay and brilliant fellow, full of his reminiscences of Egypt and the Golden Horn, and of talk of Parisian soirees and of nights at Baden-Baden. He had always had his way in this old-surburban town, and it was quite natural that he should fall into the leadership again.

The young fellow had excellent parts, but he had never used them, and did not know what work was. He had been left an orphan at a tender age, and adopted by a miserly old uncle who alternately petted him and swore at him, which made him a little reckless and desperate. When he grew up—handsome as a young Adonis—all the women went to work and spoiled him, as they generally do a handsome man. Then his uncle died and left him a fortune, and so there was nothing for the young man but to enjoy himself.

He had a wonderful capacity for flirtations, and more than one woman's happiness was sacrificed to his vanity and recklessness. Against one target he had committed the very blackest of deadly wrongs, and Maud Fleming was glad to hide herself in obscurity from the scorn and reproaches of that consistent world which never forgives in a woman the sin it winks at in a man. From that hour she had never been heard from.

But Percy Hamilton held up his head and went on his way, and beautiful women, virtuous women they called in his wives, united on him as sweetly as ever. Three years had gone by since that sad event, and many had forgotten it had ever happened. The fair beauties of Aylesville were wonderfully fascinated by the face and manners of the dashing fellow; in fact, were mad over him—all but one.

And she, Agnes Harcourt, was the most beautiful of them, and the one whom Percy was the most desirous to win interest. Indeed, any man would have been charmed with Miss Harcourt.

They called her a fine girl, and was not one exactly, though she was much too haughty to deny the charge, Heart and softness were things she had been laid at her feet, but she quietly rejected them all, and passed on in her queenly way, cold, calm and charming, but as uncomfortable as ever. Pride of lineage, she never appeared to seek admiration.

She had been but a short time in Aylesville. Where she came from nobody could ever ascertain. The first they knew of her, she had come into their midst one gorgeous June morning, as if dropped from the clouds, her self and her belongings in the magnificent dress and glorious beauty than the brilliant sky above her. The next they heard she had purchased a handsome residence in the outskirts of the town and was refitting and furnishing it magnificently enough for a princess' villa. She seemed the possessor of marvelous wealth, and wealth everywhere has its adorers.

Of course Miss Harcourt soon met Mr. Hamilton. At the very first meeting he appeared to be completely fascinated, and soon became her most devoted admirer. It went on for three months in the usual way. Parties, sleighrides, operas, etc., and Hamilton everywhere Miss Harcourt attended. It was evident that Percy had more than his wonted interest; that his heart was touched and that he was in dead earnest. As for Miss Harcourt no one could tell.

In February there was a fete at Harcourt Lodge. All upper tendom was present. The hostess was magnificent in a dress of black velvet, with diamonds on her neck and arms. No one had ever seen her so graceful and queenly. There was a flush on her cheeks and a sparkle in her eyes, and there was a resonant ring in her voice like the echo of silver bells. Some of her old lovers felt the flame stirring anew, and looked daggers at Hamilton, who seemed the hero of the hour. A few others sighed and regard him with envy at all.

"By Jove!" said young Bob Alcott, who, one had jilted somersix months previously, "Miss Harcourt is on her high horse to-night, but there's a beauty ahead. Do you see how spoony Percy is?"

"Oh, I'll risk Hamilton," answered Fred Loveland. "He can't succeed in long-eyeing Miss Harcourt knows it," a wrong.

"I don't care," said Alcott; "there's fun ahead, and don't you forget it. Look at him now while she is talking to him. Why, man, there's a flush on his cheek like a girl's blush at her lover's first kiss. And she—I rather think I know the meaning of the steely gleam in those eyes of hers. Well, I rather guess I do."

His companion laughed, for most people did not give Hamilton the credit of having any heart, although they regarded Miss Harcourt as a scientific coquette.

Two hours afterward, if any one had been in the conservatory they might have heard that which showed plainly that Percy Hamilton had a heart and that it all belonged to this woman. They stood face to face in the dim, soft light, amid the perfume of the flowers, her face very calm and even cold, his full of earnestness and concentrated passion.

"Why will you not answer me, Agnes?" holding her hands in a fierce clutch. "For three interminable weeks you have kept me in agony; a week more like this would kill me."

"I think that is exaggeration, Mr. Hamilton," she answered, in a low, sweet voice, that sting him as a barrier as he chose; and for the most part he chose to let it alone.

"No man has a right to throw his life away," answered the Doctor, solemnly. "Life is a holy trust——"

"You do not know the reason why I indged it better to die than to live. I ought to die, I deserve to die; yet she might have pity on the whole tenor of my life. I do not blame her; she was just; but, oh, I love her so, Doctor. I have not loved before I die. I must see Maud—Miss Harcourt. She must forgive me. Oh, will not the sacrifice of my worthless life atone in part for the wrong I did her."

There was no need of sending, for only a few moments after Miss Harcourt—Maud Fleming—herself came in. She went straight to the bedside, knelt down, and lifted Hamilton's head against her bosom.

"My darling," she said, in a tone whose soul-ringing tenderness made his weakened head thrill like wine, "will you forgive me? I had no right to take vengeance out of God's own hands. I had no right to punish you as I did. And yet only heaven knows what it cost me, for, Percy, I love you as I never loved any one on earthly thing. I have never ceased to love you. In all my sorrows and in all my triumphs you have been the dear one of my heart. And you must live to bless me—to be mine. Oh, my darling, my darling!" and leaning her face on his, she gave way to a fit of sobbing which shook her from head to foot.

Old Dr. Amnesty slipped out of the room and left them together. When he went back there was a new and sanctified peace on both faces.

"Doctor, I am going to live, and you must help me," said Hamilton, with a smile that lighted up his pale, handsome features. "I have something to live for now, and, God helping, I will retrieve the past."

And Percy Hamilton did live, and, through Maud Fleming's love, became a happy, prosperous, honored man. The past they never revealed.

NOTE.—I am should attempt to write Fred Loveland. He could never catch long-eyeing Miss Harcourt knows it," a wrong.

SOMETHING ABOUT COFFEE.

Perhaps the most important individual of the Cinchona tribe is the coffee plant. Coffee is the produce of an evergree shrub, a native of Abyssinia and Arabia. The fruit is a berry about the size of a cherry, covered with a pulp sweet in taste and not very thick. Inside this pulp are two seeds, separated from each other by a parchment-like membrane. These seeds are the well-known coffee. The coffee-seed has been frequently analyzed; chemists have found in it several oily gums and albuminous matters, but the valuable principle is crystalline, and denominated caffeine. Every person knows that coffee is rendered fit for culinary purposes by the process of roasting, but the precise agency of this roasting process is not understood.

It is supposed that it was only in the fifteenth century that coffee was transported from Abyssinia to Arabia Felix. But if Arabia be not the native land of coffee, it is at least its most prosperous adopted home. Nowhere else does the plant flourish better, nowhere is the resulting coffee so delicious in flavor, especially that raised in the country of Yemen, in the environs of Mocha. The Orientals, it is well known, first introduced the use of coffee into Europe; but when they, the Orientals, first became acquainted with the beverage is still uncertain. An Arabian author of the fifteenth century, named Schehabeddin, states that the Mufti of Aden, in the ninth century, was the first to use coffee as a beverage; but it is certain that at this period the use of the infusion was known in Persia. According to vulgar tradition, the discovery of coffee is due to the Mollah Chadelly, whose memory is held in reverence by all true Mussulmans. This pious man, afflicted with sorrow at the thought that he could not keep awake for the performance of his nocturnal devotions, besought Mohammed to indicate some means by which sleep might be chased away. Mohammed, touched with pity as well as delight, seeing that his own honor was concerned, so brought matters about that a herdsman came to acquaint Mollah Chadelly of the curious fact that his the herdsman's goats could not go to sleep after they had partaken of coffee berries, but kept frisking about all night long. The Mollah, taking the hint, at once prepared a good strong dose of coffee. He drank it, and was delighted beyond measure at the result. Not a wink of sleep did he get; delicious sensations crowded on the brain; and his unbidden visitors were such as never that he at once communicated the precious secret to some devotees, who, imitating his example, beleagured the prophet, now in the seventh heaven of bliss, with unceasing prayers.

According to another tale, the discovery was made by the prior of a convent at Marouites, who, on receiving the report of a camel-driver to the effect that his beasts could get no sleep after having browsed on the coffee plant, at once bethought himself what a good thing coffee would be for the monks, who, like the Mollah Chadelly, appear to have been torpid, sleepy fellows, and had acquired the habit of taking a meal—not quite obsolete now—of going to sleep in church. The practice, we are told, was sometimes inconvenient.

But coffee, like many other good things, had its enemies, and, strange to say, the very Mohammedan priests who were the first to patronize it became its most rancorous foes. The fact was this: they generally was coffee approved of by the Arabian populace more than wine, instead of going to the mosque, spent their days in coffee-shops; and as there does not appear to have been any act of Parliament to enforce the closing of coffee-houses during church or rather mosque-time, the priests made up their minds of empty benches. Forthwith the mollahs anathematized the seductive berry, but all those who gave up coffee, they said, was as bad as wine or spirituous liquors, if not worse. He unpopularity of the drink was such that even every part of the Turkish Empire, Religious anathemas, however, being mischievous as they are, powerful as they are, at length an appeal was made to physical force. "In the year of the Hegira 963" (A. D. 1538), says an Arabian historian, "while large numbers were assembled in the month of Rhamadan, employed in drinking coffee, the governor of the guard surprised them, forced them ignominiously from the shops, locked them up all night in the Pasha's house, and the next morning administered to each individual, by way of a salutary admonition, seventeen stripes."

Persecution, as usual, proved useless. As a result the very opposite of that intended. Coffee speedily became immensely popular. At the period of the seventeenth century there was numbered in Cairo no less than 2,000 coffee-shops, all the principal ones celebrated as among Eastern Mussulmans one of the first necessaries of life. When a Turk sighs a sigh over his unacknowledged beauties he formally contracts with her friends that she is always to have plenty of coffee. If coffee-drinking accounts, however, are to be trusted, Turkish ladies have got into the habit of drinking it to excess. At the present time, they have no souls to lose; hence they may drink spirituous liquor with impunity.

Before the seventeenth century coffee was scarcely known in France, even by name. At length certain travelers returning from the East brought a little coffee with them for their own private use. In the year 1671, Thevenot invited some friends to a party, and gave them coffee to drink; but he had been preceded by a Levantine, who, three years before, had established at Paris a coffee shop; his speculation, however, did not succeed. It was in the history monde that coffee first became popularized. The Turkish Ambassador at the French Court, Soliman Aga, was in the habit of offering coffee, after the manner of his country, to those who attended his levees. The ladies of the French Court no sooner heard of this custom than they expressed their desire of tasting the seductive liquor, whereupon the Turk, being a polite man, as all Turks are, invited the ladies to his house, and gave them coffee to their hearts' content. Madame de Sevigne was opposed to this fashion; she did not approve of coffee; said it was only a short-lived taste; that it would pass away and be forgotten, like Racine. Well, the lady was right, after all, though not after the fashion she intended; coffee has passed away and been forgotten "like Racine!" About the same time it was that coffee first came into favor at Vienna. The Turks, driven from before the walls of the city by Sobieski, left their camp in the hands of the conqueror. In this camp here was abundance of coffee and a retinue of slaves whose office was to prepare it. Coffee had already been introduced among the Londoners in the following manner: An English merchant, named Edwards, returning from Smyrna, brought with him a Greek servant. Passport by many, who opened a coffee-shop in New man's Court, Cornhill, in 1652. Other coffee-shops speedily arose; but Cromwell, then in power, set himself against them, and closed them, fearing lest they might injure the taverns. Another account says that the first coffee-shop in England was opened by a Jew named Jacobs, at Oxford, in 1650.

All the supplies of coffee imported for a long time into Europe were obtained from Arabia. It was brought by way of Alexandria and the Levant; but the Pashas of Egypt and Syria imposed enormous taxes upon it. Europeans then began to obtain it by the channel of the Red Sea. Holland took the lead in this commerce, and was followed France; and, lastly, England. In 1669, the Dutch, under the direction of Van Horne, first President of the Dutch East India colonies, having procured certain coffee plants, sent them to Batavia, where they flourished well. The French next introduced coffee into Martinique; and the English following their example, planted the coffee shrub in many of their tropical colonies.

In the United States coffee is consumed to the amount of about sixteen pounds per annum for each person, and is steadily increasing, not in strength, but in imputation.

An Australian Interdesant.

Their own stimulant, kava, they continue to use in great quantities, and many of the Europeans have contracted a liking for it. It is said to produce soap suds more than anything else one can compare it with. The root used is chewed by the natives, and the spittle mathisticins; it is hard and woody, hence the object of the chewing, which they express in no very delicate manner, is to get the juices of the roots more freely than any other process. Europeans grate the root and pound it, but say that the liquor is not equal to the chewed. It is said the peculiar virtues of the kava bowl is attended with very great economy, only the young unmarried girls being allowed to chew it. The root is cut up into fine pieces, and the girls, who are directed by the president of the feast, each one her mouthful, take up a piece, and when sufficiently masticated and formed into a ball, spit it into the bowl. The chief then calls for water, and, after washing her hands, directs one of her companions to pour on the water while she squeezes the root with her hand. When enough water is in, and the balls are properly mixed with the liquor, the latter is strained in a strainer made of fibers of the hibiscus and passes it from side to side of the bowl in this operation, and he who performs it lifts it high above the bowl and squeezes the balls through the strainer by hand. But as continued until the kava bowl is ready. It is considered by some of the Europeans who use kava to be the most delicious drink, and that the mastication is perfectly dry and is a most cleanly process, but of course an amount of saliva must get mixed up with the liquor. The other Europeans who use it as a tonic and nervous sedative, and it is to these others, and not to its users, that the cases for the drink arises.—Melbourne Australian Leader.

A Quiet Man in Mexico.

"Oh, yes."

We all went into the shed room, and we went the rooms is so thin that bar every word that's said; and I'm dogged and giggled, and got to be sort of fashion, but not to me. In 1669, the Dutch, under the direction of Van Horne, first President of the Dutch East India colonies, having procured certain coffee plants, sent them to Batavia, where they flourished well. The French next introduced coffee into Martinique; and the English following their example, planted the coffee shrub in many of their tropical colonies.

In the United States coffee is consumed to the amount of about sixteen pounds per annum for each person, and is steadily increasing, not in strength, but in imputation.

An Australian Interdesant.

Their own stimulant, kava, they continue to use in great quantities, and many of the Europeans have contracted a liking for it. It is said to produce soap suds more than anything else one can compare it with. The root used is chewed by the natives, and the spittle mathisticins; it is hard and woody, hence the object of the chewing, which they express in no very delicate manner, is to get the juices of the roots more freely than any other process. Europeans grate the root and pound it, but say that the liquor is not equal to the chewed. It is said the peculiar virtues of the kava bowl is attended with very great economy, only the young unmarried girls being allowed to chew it. The root is cut up into fine pieces, and the girls, who are directed by the president of the feast, each one her mouthful, take up a piece, and when sufficiently masticated and formed into a ball, spit it into the bowl. The chief then calls for water, and, after washing her hands, directs one of her companions to pour on the water while she squeezes the root with her hand. When enough water is in, and the balls are properly mixed with the liquor, the latter is strained in a strainer made of fibers of the hibiscus and passes it from side to side of the bowl in this operation, and he who performs it lifts it high above the bowl and squeezes the balls through the strainer by hand. But as continued until the kava bowl is ready. It is considered by some of the Europeans who use kava to be the most delicious drink, and that the mastication is perfectly dry and is a most cleanly process, but of course an amount of saliva must get mixed up with the liquor. The other Europeans who use it as a tonic and nervous sedative, and it is to these others, and not to its users, that the cases for the drink arises.—Melbourne Australian Leader.

"Oh, yes."

"Only one."

"Any revolutions?"

"Only three."

"What's become of Miss?"

"Oh, he was shot last week."

"And Zagual?"

It is stated on good authority that it is a well-known fact that no watch will keep the same time with two people. BAFFLED!

One of the Most Unaccountable and Dangerous of Recent Deceits Discovered and Exposed.

There is some mysterious trouble that is attacking nearly every one in the land with more or less violence. It seems to steal into and undermine the health in the night. Doctors cannot diagnose it. Scientists are puzzled by its symptoms. It is, indeed, a modern mystery. Like those severe and curse maladies that attack horses and prostrate nearly all the animals in the land, this subtle trouble seems to menace mankind. Many of its victims have pass-an-out the chestnut side, and sometimes in the face. They feel dull and sleepy; the mouth has a bad taste; appetite is fickle; sometimes a sick, all-gone sensation is felt at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes grow sunken, the tunics on tent feel coated in one time and burn intensely at others. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but after a few months it is attended with a grayish-colored expectoration. The mind of one feels loss of the white and sleep does not seem to be a quiet any more. The heart palpitates with very slight exertion; the pulse is small and beats rapidly; the bowels are irregular, sometimes costive, at other times relaxed. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste, and sometimes with a sweetish taste; this is often attended with palpitation of the heart. As the disease progresses the appetite fails entirely, the bowels become very costive, the skin dry, harsh and hot, and great weakness. Most of these symptoms are at times present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population have this disorder in some of its varied forms, while medical men never almost wholly mistaken its nature. Some have treated it for one complaint, some for another, but nearly all have failed to reach the seat of the disorder, and well-nigh physicians are baffled with it in their practice. The experience of Dr. A. G. Richards, resident at No. 15 Tremont street, Boston, is thus described by himself:

"I had all these troubles, and grew constantly worse until I have found admitting so many of my patients used with so much benefit, that I used it myself. I knew all the commonly established remedies would be innovative, for I had tried them in others in the past. I had therefore determined to strike out in a new path in my nervous sufferings. I found that it was impressive. The dull, stupid feeling departed, and I began to enjoy life once more. My appetite returned. My sleep was refreshing. The color of my face, which had been a sickly yellow, gradually assumed the pink hue of health. In the course of three months I felt that I was well, and I knew that I was clearly master of the wonderful curative power of Warner's Safe Cure. The Rest, which was all the medicine I took.

Doctors and scientists exhaust their skill in vain, and their diagnosis is at fault, when Hop Bitters has been used by, or is known to, the poor-sufferer, and then all is clear. If they save the victim of other power and prescription, they are worthless. Why not use Hop Bitters by prevention and cure, how immense is the saving of suffering! Why is a remedy and valuable prepared on a within reach, so neglected?

Hop Bitters is a purely vegetable compound of the purest and most healthful curative properties known, and contains no drugs, poisons or whiskey. Its power is wonderful.

Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT Cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and where families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if it use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in Chronic and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

MRS. RAY'S LODGERS,

And Her Romance That Ended Happily.

"What became of my little Miss L.? Why, my dear, do you remember her? Yes, I know you did not meet her, but only once—that was the day you spent with me when you were going East, through from Dakota.

"Well, I need not wonder that you do remember her. 'Twas a face to make an impression on one, I am sure. A dear, sweet, tender face, indeed. Of course, my dear, I am only too pleased to tell you about her.

"Let me see! We were in that cozy flat on the north side then, and it was altogether the most desirable place I have lived in since we came to Chicago six years ago. I was sorry indeed to make a change.

"Oh, my dear, many things happened then which would interest you to hear, I am sure. We took lodgers, you know. No, not to make money, but to help about rent, and I like to have people around me. You see Mr. Ray and I are growing old. Yes, old it will be soon if we are inclined to cling to middle-aged as our rightful title. And not a dear child of our own have we ever had. So we have room in our hearts for all who come under our roof, and sooner or later all my lodgers have come to seem like our own family. Why, there were those three boys who had the north room for two years. Noble lads, and away from their homes and their mothers, in a great city. How could I help mothering them a little? My boys I always called them, and think of them as 'my boys' to this day. Those are their photographs on the mantel, my dear, and one of them was quite an artist. I will show you some little bits of his work by-and-by.

"But about little Miss L. I always called her that, and I came to love her dearly. I did indeed.

"She was in my house almost a year, you see, and she crept into my heart and I had no reason to regret it. I liked her the very first time I saw her, and the little parlor and bed-room pleased her so much that she engaged them at once, and brought her few belongings in the very next day. I was pleased to see her as she went about putting her knickknacks here and there in a quiet way of her own.

"Quiet contentment there seemed to be in her face, and yet I saw a shadow of something, I could not tell what, in her eyes which I came to long to drive away. I wanted to see her merry. She was not old enough to be so quiet, and nothing she told me afterward about herself seemed to explain it to me. But don't think she seemed unhappy! How well I remember her saying after only two or three days: 'Dear Mrs. Ray, I haven't been in so homelike a place for years. You have no idea how contented I am.' That pleased me, don't you see? That was what I wanted it to seem, my dear—homelike. Well, the light housekeeping helped me to get acquainted quickly. Yes, my dear, she had her little solitaire, and cooked for herself, and I counsel her to use my oven whenever she liked. Indeed, I was only too pleased to have her do so. Then I began to think she did not eat enough hearty food, and tried to persuade her to eat more meat. Now, you need not laugh, my dear. Mr. Hobby? Well, better meat than medicine, anyway, I shall always say. I wanted her to grow bright and merry, don't you see?

"But no, in spite of fresh air and hearty food there was no change quiet, and I almost knew it wasn't her natural manner. To be sure, there were reasons for her to be sad sometimes. So was all alone. She told me about her sister, your mother, and how tenderly she said it.

"Her mother's picture was in a little frame on a bracket, and there was a tiny bunch of pressed violets pinned against it.

"Mamma died when I was ten,' she said one day, 'and after awhile papa married again.' Then she waited for a moment and then said, with a firm look coming around her mouth, 'And I feel happier to take care of myself.'

"And she earned enough money, my dear, to do it. There were the piano pupils almost every day she was away down here on the south side—quite her own town. Then, between times, she painted the prettiest little things, and she said, too, though hardly for what they were worth, I am sure. Yes, she was always busy. Plenty to do and strength to do it. I said to her once, 'Surely, Miss L., that ought to make you happy.'

"She looked up and smiled at me, and said, 'I am not unhappy.'

"No, my dear, and she wasn't, yet she was not what I felt sure she might be and had been, and that was bright and merry. What was the matter with her? And she had a lover, for she had told me of singing here and there in years gone. Now, I knew when there's a ready heart to hear a song comes bubbling up from it now and then—a little humming over words you know well, my dear, at least. But I never heard it for seven or eight months. Then a Sunday evening I remember it was, and I noticed it, for it surprised and delighted me.

"It was William,' said I, that's Mr. Ray, you see, my dear, little Miss L. is talking of.

"'And it was William,' she sang, in a voice that trembled, and then she sang through the verse, and what she sang now the story was. No, not a word to indicate it was her—

"'Lover, parted lover,
Weary, waiting one,
Is the song you sing
Of heart and I?'

"It was a foolish question, but after a little she sang again—

"'For heart of heart and I
Will sing one song
And one song only.'

"And when I went in, after awhile, with Ellen, my funny little Swedish maid, to tidy up things a bit, and said 'Good-morning to little Miss L.,' there was a new look on her face. Not that the shadow I told you about was all gone, either. Well, of course, it puzzled me, and the next day, and the next, I watched her, and she seemed different in some way.

"Then Wednesday, my dear, I said something. You see, 'twas this way: I went in with a plate of cakes for her, and I said: 'These doughnuts are not as good as usual, I'm afraid,' and she said, 'Do not think I shall lay that up against you, Mrs. Ray,' and laughed such a merry little laugh, my dear, that I just stopped and looked at her in blank amazement.

"The light-heartedness that showed itself in that foolish little pun and in the laugh!

"I sat down my plate and took hold of her with both hands. 'Little Miss L.,' said I, 'now do please tell me what makes you so smashing for two or three days!'

"'Why, am I?' she asked, and a pretty pink color came into her cheeks; then she grew a little bit grave and hesitated, and then—

"'Well, I'll tell you, dear Mrs. Ray,' she said, 'though I am afraid you will think me very, very foolish. It is a little dream I had last Saturday night. But first I must tell you that once—once there was some one I loved—oh! very dearly, Mrs. Ray, and he loved me, too; but there was a little—what shall I say? It was just a little foolish quarrel, anyway, and he went away angry, and—and—' her voice began to tremble, then she said, with a little impudent couch that was almost a sob, 'it was almost two years ago, and I have never seen him since! But I know,' and she looked right at me, and spoke quite earnestly, 'I feel so sure, some way, that he is coming back to me soon. And now I'll tell you the dream.'

"Then she came and sat down right by me, my dear, and I took one of her hands in mine.

"'I dreamed,' she said, 'that the door how I loved was sitting in some room, which seemed to be my home, and it was Sunday. It is all very hazy and indistinct, and I had not spoken to him, but I went to his side and handed him a paper, or an envelope, or something like that, and he did not look up, but put out his hand and took mine and drew me nearer to him. I stood there just an instant, and some one said to him: "Ralph, are you going to church this evening?" and without replying, he looked up into my eyes and asked, "Are you?" I shook my head and he answered the question quietly, "No I think not," and held my hand more closely. And some way I knew we were at peace, and a great happiness came into my heart, and right then I awoke and found the tears running down my cheeks, and I turned my face against my pillow and prayed a little prayer, and asked God to let the dream come true, and send him back to me, that we might help each other to be better and happier all the rest of our lives, and ever since that I've had a new little hope. And that is all. Is it very, very foolish?'

"She looked at me so wistfully. 'Why, my dear,' said I, and then—why, my dear, I said right over again, and then I just rose right up and went over, for my throat was getting all choked, and I knew I was going to act like a silly old woman and cry.

"It was the simple, tender way in which she told it, don't you see? And the childlike faith! It was so long since I had seen that kind of faith. You know, my dear, I've been about a great deal, and have seen something of this hard world, and there isn't much of that kind of faith to be found in grown-up people. You find it in little ones who kneel to say the 'Now I lay me,' I'll be sure, but I had almost forgotten all about it.

"Well, the days passed by, and the hopefulness still shone out of her eyes, and sometimes I heard her singing.

"One day about the 4th of February, I think, when I went in for a little chat, she was painting valentines. Such pretty and original little things I thought her, you know, and—

"Several weeks before little Miss L. had asked me for a little washboxes of the chickens we should have every Sunday dinner I had taken her quite a number of them. Well, I went in for a little chat, she was painting valentines. Such pretty and original little things I thought her, you know, and—

"Oh, my dear, she was as happy as a child over some pretty toy. Why, I never saw such a change in any one in my life. Her face was all bright color, and in the lower left-hand corner of the card were some flowers painted forget-me-nots, you know I remember. Then in the right-hand corner there was some appropriate line for the rhyme, I suppose.

"At this touching moment there came a ring at the front door, and I went into the room, and little Miss L. stood up for me to see. It is one picture one does not forget, my dear, and I shall never forget her as she looked then.

"The rhyme, of course—

"'And if you love me as I love you,
No knife can cut our love in two.'

"And—I was going to say—the verse were her initials D. E. L., and her own pet name, Dorothy, and her last name, Dorothy, but of course you know it is all true. The joke is over, dear little Miss L. has gone to her ship, I would down on the Sunset side, and I had the rent to pay, and some of my own, and as I passed Dorothy's window among other pretty things I saw little Miss L.'s valentines.

"A brown-haired gentleman stood there looking them over intently, and as I passed by he looked up and smiled, and then I had anticipated, and I went into Thompson's for lunch and took a seat at an empty table. Soon after a gentleman seated himself at a table opposite me. I fancied I had seen him somewhere, and thought he glanced rather sharply in my direction. He did this several times, and I decided he must be looking at some one behind me.

"He was one of the particular kind, my dear, and was some time in selecting something for his lunch, but finally a tempting repast was placed before him. Just then a lady passed by me, going out, and I recognized little Miss L. I could not mistake that brown Russian circular nor the brown velvet hat, with the long, floating feather, although I did not see her face.

"But think how astonished I was to see the gentleman opposite me start to his feet, hurry into his overcoat, snatch his hat, hastily hand the waiter some money, and, leaving his lunch untasted, rush out, apparently in pursuit of little Miss L.

"Well, I finished my shopping and on my way to the street-car stopped for a minute at Bascom's window myself and saw that little Miss L.'s valentine with the pussy was gone.

"Then I went home, and as I entered the hall noticed that little Miss L.'s door stood ajar and some one was with her. Now, I don't think I am an eavesdropper, my dear, and I give you my word I did not intend to listen while I took off my cloak and bonnet, but I heard a manly voice say: 'What kind of a feather is that on your hat, Dot?'

"'A bird of Paradise,' she answered, 'but why, Ralph?'

"'That is what I thought,' said he, 'and I followed it to its home.' Just then one of my parcels dropped and the noise brought little Miss L. to close her door, but seeing me she insisted on my coming in. She held a white card in her hand, and What do you think, dear Mrs. Ray? she said, 'one of my valentines has come back to me.'

"Then she introduced Mr. Ralph Ainsworth, and her face was as bright as a sunbeam.

"Well, of course, my dear, he proved to be the same brown-bearded gentleman I had seen twice before that same day, and I could not refrain from asking him how he enjoyed his lunch.

"Then there was an explanation and a hearty laugh, and they told me how the old valentines first caught his eye, and the initials D. E. L. took him into the store to learn the name and address of the artist, on whom he determined to call as soon after lunch as propriety would admit, he said.

"And of course you guess all the rest, my dear.

"She isn't little Miss L. any longer, and when they found Mr. Ray and I were coming over here on the South Side they rented that same cozy little flat, and there they are to this day, as happy as happy can be.

BLAINE LAID BARE.

A Supplemental Edition of the Mulligan Letters Written by Blaine.

One of His Friends Who Advanced Him Money Which He Did Not Return.

Anxiety of the Tattooed Knight to Assist His Companions to Establish a Bank.

Appeals to "My Dear Fisher" That Would Cause the Flintiest of Stones to Weep.

The Mulligan letters which James G. Blaine suppressed have been given to the world through the Boston papers, and are printed below.

The reason that Mr. Fisher gives for handing the letters printed is that he considered it a duty to have them published for the benefit of the people of the United States. Mr. Mulligan has been denounced by the Blaine papers, and his integrity impeached. Both Mulligan and Fisher have considered it their duty to defend themselves, and they submit the letters without comment:

To the People of the United States:

Believing that it is our duty to lay before our fellow-countrymen the following documents which have been in our keeping, we have placed the originals for safe keeping in the hands of Messrs. Sohier & Welch, counselors, of Boston, and herewith submit their contents without comment. The letters from Mr. Fisher are letter-press copies of the originals.

AUGUSTA, Me., Oct. 4, 1876. My Dear Mr. Fisher: Find inclosed draft for check in payment of A. G. Columbia's subscription. I promised you and I receive by same mail the 20 per cent. due on all the subscriptions already forwarded to you, and also on the following: Philo Hersey, Belfast, $5,000; A. W. Jennings, Belfast, $5,000; H. A. Johnson, Hope, $5,000; N. B. Munroe, Belfast, $5,000; C. F. Harding, Belfast, $5,000. This makes $125,000 in all I have disposed of. It is limited to $150,000, but you and I could not know for certain now, so there will be no delay to embarrass you in any way. As one will very soon know from me that I have disposed of a similar amount in Maine, they need not be informed of the transaction with Mr. Caldwell. I don't wish you to notify the latter with Mr. Caldwell will tell you how from me again. Please send receipt to A. G. Columbia, Newburgh, Me.

Yours truly, J. G. BLAINE.

After I received the letter in regard to Mr. Adams' case I telegraphed again. Belmo had returned, and I think he expressly says you are to be ordered by him.

P. S.—I send only $8,000 this morning. will send $7,500 remaining to-morrow morning.

AUGUSTA, Me., Oct. 5, 1870.—$5,000.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I inclose you $2,500 check, balance of A. & P. Columbia's installment; $2,500 in person of Anson P. Morrill's installment. Let M. Morrill's subscription of $5,000 is additional to those already solved, making in all $12,500. There may possibly be $2,500 more from him, but will be merely mill. I received yours inclosing R. H. Dutcher's letter from Belfast. In mail succeeding this you will receive a cashier's check for $1,000, and hereafter we will have no trouble with any of the Maine subscriptions. All will come to you in cashier checks or in bills direct by express. I have sent you say about the importance of my having all the money I can raise at this time. It would be well to determine upon the line which you would wish to go. I suppose it might be prudent also to secure a $50,000 loan in that locality; you would largely wish to do so safe. But they are very profitable bonds, because pay 6 per cent. Yours very truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, JR., Esq.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS, UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 7, 1870.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I have received Mr. Bontwell's answer. I presume you will not want it necessary to come up here; if so, let me know of it a day or two in advance. I have written Mr. Caldwell to make the bank; no trouble in securing a bank of Kennebec. The security I will not specify, but the use of the several of Little Rock; says it is impossible. Very hastily and truly, J. G. BLAINE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 7, 1870.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I have very hastily, before my departure for Washington, to send to the bank. A further conference with the Committee of the Harmony gives me confidence that the bonds which are of interest, and that Caldwell knows about, will be secured, and Mr. Caldwell knows about it to him. They are now drawing 10 per cent. upon the par of the bonds and of all the bonds, as at different periods in the past. They are worth 60 cents upon their par—half have still 10 per cent. Your friends—from a basis of 60 cents. Now, your friends—I speak [illegible] please; but you will see that there is no time or per cent. circulation, and you will soon know, of course; as I know it, that the issue interest, you will very likely be disposed to do something in favor of your friends who are looking upon the handling securities. The opinion gains ground in our state very rapidly, as you will infer from Secretary Bontwell's report, that the debt can't be funded at less than 5 per cent. By taking in bonds, therefore, you would be interested as long as the banking system lasts, or at least for thirty years and more. Now of the bonds mature in from 1 to 10, and that is quite long enough to embrace within the time of our financial operations. It might be well to have your formal application for your three-score of eight, and then talk—ask your cashier to write for getting your stocks substituted. Write to-day. I will confer with General Lucas in regard to [illegible], etc. It might be in the mean time to [illegible] better, by the way.

J. G. BLAINE.

W. FISHER, JR.

AUGUSTA, Me., Dec. 7, 1870.—My Dear Fisher: I am in hopes you will find every $25,000 or more that I had interest to right and right. It will be on hand—I mean at that. The most of June—June and August—will be all. After that I am in hopes to have a better check or so for every two years. I need not say about the importance of my having all the money I can raise at this time. I think the bonds will be looked right in the future—as much as any one human being can foresee. I am not [illegible] to anything—my honor, my honor, my honor. I remain [illegible] of obtaining the spell coupon, and I [illegible] you in turn to fasten. They all agree with you, and I hope [illegible] of your own. I [illegible] you come over the bridge [illegible] Hallowell, and I [illegible] with you. I [illegible] Hallowell, and I [illegible] with you. I [illegible] Hallowell, and I [illegible] with you. I [illegible] Hallowell, and I [illegible] with you.

W. FISHER, JR., Esq.

J. G. BLAINE.

AUGUSTA, Me., June 11, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I tried very hard yesterday and day before to consummate enough to run across you. I am in a terrible mill and could not get away. Can you come over to my connection with the Fort Smith railroad? Have succeeded in getting the bonds to market at 90, and the only result to be [illegible] is the [illegible] of the bonds. The best possible [illegible] of the presidents is $250,000 which I [illegible] to you. Can you come over? Can you [illegible] me your own credit on the distinct understanding with your name? Please answer me, and think I was also to receive a certain percentage of the bonds. I have [illegible] to you that I had [illegible] the larger part—and not a dollar of the bonds. I have [illegible] to you that I had [illegible] I have [illegible] of coupons, a little over one million, and [illegible] of the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad, and as a last resort I had to [illegible] to the Northern Pacific Railroad, and as a last resort I had to [illegible] to the Northern Pacific Railroad, and as a last resort I had to [illegible] to the Northern Pacific

A $3 Poem.

I have been shown your paper sir, in which you say you'll pay
Three dollars for the poorest poem sent till the fifteenth day
Of April. Now I can get up poor poetry
With just as little trouble as the squirrels go up a tree.

When Widow Johnson's barn was burnt
(some think 'twas set afire
From sparks from over across the lot, where they were setting tires)
The time she lost her little boy, whom cruel fate did smother,
The neighbors kindly set about to help her raise another.

They made her a donation call and made me
do the speechifying,
The folks were tickled, and declared 'twas nigh as good as preaching;
And when we sung the piece I wrote, ten verses, common meter,
And which I gave out five by nine—said nothing could be sweeter.

As like as not this poetry will be too good by half,
As sure you get nary be so bad it would make the horses laugh.
But never mind, I shall feel pleased whenever good shall abound,
Remembering the Good book says: "Put not the wise to riches."
—Josh Billings, in Rockland Courier-Gazette.

Marshal Ney.

The Kansas City Times recently contained an article on Marshal Ney, giving evidence in support of the theory of his American birth, and alludes to his career in France as follows:

In France Ney joined the army, and fought as a private under the great Napoleon. Egypt, Toulon, the reign of terror, the consulate, Marengo, and Austerlitz, the first empire and the one hundred days, are some of the scenes of this stirring period with which the young hero must have been familiar. His heart was broken by his wife's supposed treachery and dishonor. His soul was fired with an ambition for military glory, and he fought with the desperation of one who courts death, and who has everything to win and nothing to lose in this life.

At that time very few of the French soldiers could write. During the heat of a terrific battle, the story goes, Napoleon called to send a dispatch. For the moment his aides had left or been separated from him. He turned to a corps near him.

"Can any of you write?"

Private Ney touched his cap.

"I come to my quarters."

Napoleon dictated a dispatch. As the private sat writing a ball from the enemy's cannon tore through the tent and exploded between the general and his improvised secretary, plowing up the ground at their feet. Ney never looked up nor moved a muscle, but, finishing the line, shook the sand from the paper, and handing it to Napoleon, said:

"They have saved me the trouble of sanding (blotting) the dispatch."

Napoleon could only gaze on the unconcerned young man with admiration, and exclaimed: "The bravest of the brave!"

From that time Ney's advancement was very rapid.

The matters here given are not supposed to be strictly historical, but are given as remembered by one who heard them from the mouths of men who knew the actors in their lifetime.

After the fall of Napoleon and his banishment to Elba Marshal Ney, and the other great generals of the fallen hero, was released on parole. Then came the escape from Elba and the one hundred days. Ney and Murat and the other great marshals flocked to the standard of the little giant. Where was their word of parole to bear arms no more against England and the allies now?

What next? Waterloo. The treachery or imbecility of Grouchy. Napoleon's defeat. St. Helena for Napoleon. Court martial and death for Ney, the brave Murat and the rest.

Before he was shot, Ney confessed to the judge advocate, who would fain have defended him, that he was an American subject. To his sons he said that his name was Rudolph, and that he had abandoned their mother and left her in America.

On his trial, the judge advocate exclaimed: "If I can save Marshal Ney by no other means, I now declare that he is not a Frenchman, but——"

"Hold!" cried the great general. "If I die I will die as a Frenchman. Let the past be buried with me."

He died as he had lived. Murat, the brother-in-law of Napoleon and king of Naples, begged that the soldiers would spare his face. He was a very handsome man and proud of his looks, though as brave as a lion.

Ney drew himself up to his full, folded his arms, declined to have his eyes bandaged, and said:

"Fire where you will. I have faced death too many times to fear it now."

"Ready! Aim!"—a long, level row of muskets pointing at the downed man.

"Fire!" A streak of fire runs along the line, a puff of smoke, a report, and the soul of the brave Ney had gone to join its maker.

Simple Home Remedies.

The following remedies for many simple ailments we find recommended in Hall's Journal of Health. And while the remedies may not be new to many of our readers they will be found useful to all. We now publish them that they may be at hand for ready reference.

Half a teaspoonful of common table salt dissolved in a little cold water and drank will instantly relieve "heart burn," or dyspepsia. If taken in the morning before breakfast, increasing the quantity gradually to a teaspoonful of salt and a tumbler of water, it will in a few days cure any ordinary case of dyspepsia, if at the same time due attention is paid to the diet. There is no better remedy than the above for constipation. As a gargle for sore throat it proves to effervesce of potash, and is not very safe. It may be used as often as desired, and if a little is swallowed each time, it will have a beneficial effect on the throat by cleansing it in allaying the irritation. In doses of one to four teaspoonfuls in half a pint of tepid water it acts promptly as an emetic, and, in cases of poisoning, is always on hand. It is an excellent remedy for bites and stings of insects. It is a valuable astringent in cases of hemorrhage, particularly for bleeding after the extracting of teeth. It has both cleansing and healing properties, and is therefore a most excellent application for superficial ulcerations. Mustard is another valuable remedy. No family should be without it. Two or three teaspoonfuls of ground mustard stirred into half a pint of water acts as an emetic very promptly and is milder and easier to take than salt and water. Equal parts of ground mustard and flour or meal made into a paste with warm water and spread on a thin piece of muslin, with another piece of muslin laid over it, forms the indispensible "mustard plaster." It is almost a specific for the colic when applied for a few minutes over the "pit of the stomach." For all internal pains and congestions there is no remedy of such general utility. It acts as a counter-irritant by bringing the blood to the surface; hence in severe cases of croup a small mustard plaster should be applied to the back of the child's neck. The same kind of treatment will relieve almost any case of headache. A mustard plaster should be moved about over the spot to be acted upon, for if left in one place it is liable to blister. A mustard plaster acts equally as well when at considerable distance from the affected part. An excellent substitute for mustard plaster is what is known as "mustard leaves." They come a dozen in a box, and are about four by five inches. They are perfectly dry, and will keep for a long time. For use it is only necessary to dip one in a dish of water for a minute and then apply it. Common baking soda is the best of all remedies in cases of burns and scalds. It may be used on the surface of the burned place either wet the moment his aides had left or been separated from him. He turned to a corps near him.

As Others See Us.

Some weeks ago, Mr. W. E. Osborn editor of the Antwerp (Ohio) Argus, accompanied the excursion on the Friant from Petoskey to Boyne, stopping half an hour in Charlevoix. Below is an extract from his paper dated Sept. 11th, giving his report of the trip:

On Friday last, one hundred and thirty five pleasure seekers—your humble servant among the number—boarded the beautiful little steamer, Thos. Friant, for a trip to Charlevoix and Boyne City. Charlevoix is a charming village, eighteen miles south from Petoskey, on lake Michigan and at the mouth of Pine river, and has a population of nearly two thousand. Pine river is the outlet of Pine lake; is about half a mile in length and sufficiently broad and deep to permit the passage of the largest lake vessels. The scenery in and around the place is exceedingly romantic. Passing through the river you enter Round lake, a pretty little sheet of water covering about thirty acres. From this you enter Pine lake, one of the most delightful in this region. It is eighteen miles long and nearly six miles wide. Charlevoix, situated on this beautiful lake, is a delightful summer resort, and has much in common with the other places in this delightful region, such as its pure air, clear water, and an ample supply of the choicest fish from the lake and trout streams. Its situation, between lake Michigan on the north and west, and Pine lake on the east, makes it pre eminently a choice place for a summer residence. With scarcely a single day through all the hot summer months, a refreshing breeze blows either from the one or the other of these two sheets of water. After a halt of our excursion party for half an hour, at this lovely retreat, we steamed out into the lake, and headed for Boyne city, (so named), distance seventeen miles, and situated at the head of Pine lake, and at the mouth of Boyne river. Boyne is a little village of about 300 population, and has no particular inducements to offer, as a resort for "hay fever" sufferers, as our two hours sojourn there indicated, although we cannot refrain from speaking in terms of praise, of the United States hotel, where our party were most royally entertained, and an "aching void" appeased. We were convinced that J. J. Stevens, the gentlemanly proprietor, knew how to keep a hotel. At this place is found three excellent hotels, one but recently erected by H. B. Chapman, from Reading, Mich., is the largest in this section, it having cost to build and furnish, upwards of forty thousand dollars. While at Boyne, the air was inland, and the day being a very warm one, our party were heartily glad when our little steamer was once more turned homeward. On our return, we made a short stop at Ironton where is located a blast furnace, for the purpose of manufacturing pig iron. These works are operated by a Chicago company, and when in full blast, give employment to about 600 men. The ore is brought by boat from lake Superior, and the iron is shipped mostly to Chicago. On our return trip we made another stop of half an hour at Charlevoix, where I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Major E. H. Green, present county treasurer, and custom house collector. He is also commander of G. A. R. post at this place, and during our short with him, he proved himself a very pleasing gentleman. At Charlevoix is located the Baptist summer resort, which was organized in 1878, by parties from Kalamazoo, Mich. This company owns seventy-five acres on the east side of Pine lake, and its northern boundry being the waters of Round lake.

Old Block Makes a Convert.

Good morning, how are you going to vote this election?

I shall vote the prohibition ticket, national and state, score right to the line sir.

You'll throw your vote away!

I know republican papers say so, but a vote for principle is never thrown away.

Yes, I know, but you give Cleveland a half vote.

I don't care what you say about that. I had rather throw my vote into a stream of pure water, than vote for the republican candidates, even if it is half Cleveland as you say. But honest neighbor, it would be a good thing if the republicans were defeated at this election. Then the temperance men who have not courage to leave the party now, would come over to the prohibition cause, and in '88 we would elect our whole ticket.

But it would not do to do away with high license. It is such a source of revenue to the government?

Then you admit that the license system is right and prohibition wrong.

No, not that exactly, but we can't do without the revenue in our national treasury.

Oh I see, then you would protect the republican party and the rum traffic to the tune of $700,000,000 spent annually for rum, to recruit an army of 60,000 drunkards a year, and not consider the misery and want of as many wives and children of the drunkard, besides the crime growing out of the whiskey curse.

Well, I know that looks bad, but never thought it half so bad as you picture it, but I don't see how we are to get the revenue to run the election's with if you prohibit whiskey.

Now let's talk about that whiskey revenue business. Where does all the revenue come from that is derived from the sale of whiskey?

Well I never thought of that.

Why, my dear sir, it comes from the people, for they buy the whiskey. The government gets only one dollar in every ten, and the saloon keeper gets nine dollars of the people's money, so you see the republican party makes the saloon keeper the agent, to collect the revenue from the people. Don't you think your party are rather poor financiers? Would it not be better to have prohibition and let the people keep the extra nine dollars in their pockets.

Well I declare, Mr. it does look so for that way; but I heard our minister say he was a Blaine man and somehow I thought he was right, as I always had great faith in him as a minister.

No doubt neighbor you did, and it's well to follow your minister when he's right, but when he's wrong and you are convinced of the fact, don't follow him. I heard your minister make a rousing prohibition speech and I heard him pray to God that the time would speedily come that rum would be banished from the land and that temperance, peace and plenty should reign supreme.

Yes I heard him make that same prayer.

Well, what do you think of a man who preaches the gospel of Christ to his fellows and exhorts them to be temperate and sober-minded, and work for God and humanity, that would by his example vote and encourage others to do so, with a party who sanctions high license for the whiskey crime? Would you not regard him as a hypocrite and a fraud, so far as his christianity goes?

Well Mr. I certainly should.

Then neighbor, let me say to you, what is morally wrong is not religiously or politically right.

That's a fact Mr., and here's my hand that I will vote for St. John and Daniel.

Neighbor, I have been pleased to converse with you, and remember that the only issue of the day is prohibition.

Is Our Civilization Perishable.

A moral cause which may threaten our civilization is a mistaken view of the relations between capital and labor. This cause presents a double aspect, according as capital is found to be too grasping or labor to be too exacting. It is not now for the first time that conflicts bringing grave dangers to society have arisen between these two great forces. From the obscure hints which history gives us it is evident that while the nature and extent of the respective rights of labor and capital are to-day understood, and the mediæval [illegible], the lemerant, laboring poor, often bore long without seeking redress, a time was generally reached in which the limit of forbearance was passed and terrible outbreaks, worse than any experienced in the present day, occurred. The servile insurrections of classical antiquity, the peasant wars of the middle ages in France, Germany and England, are examples of this. It is noticeable however, that these outbreaks of violence were limited in extent. The disease being local, recovery was possible, and it came from voluntary concessions by the capitalists of the period. Labor arose in rebellion because it suffered, and, the oppression being removed, quiet and contentment were restored. If the causes were strictly local, the same phenomenon might again be witnessed. Such now, however, is the solidarity of all civilized peoples that causes of discontent in the ranks of labor are likely to be universal, even when they are material in their nature, so that the danger from that source is greater than in former times. But the causes are not all of that kind; there are causes in the principles propounded by the parties to the conflict, as determining their respective rights, which, because they fly upon the wings of the wind all over the whole earth, are all the more menacing to civilization. One of these on the part of capital is the principle that there are no limits beyond which capital ought not to be allowed to accumulate; or that corporations cannot rightfully be controlled in the exercise of their charter powers; or that while monopolies, strictly so called, are illegal, virtual monopolies, entailing upon a people all the evils of real monopolies, ought not to be disturbed in gathering their collossal harvest of gain. Judge John A. Jameson, in North American

The Chicago Times of the 3d inst. says: "Never in the greatest prosperity of the country has the business of the railroads reached proportions such as they have attained during the present year. Every road in the country, whether it be in the East, West, North or South, is doing a business which would have been considered impossible a few years ago. Every train is loaded to the utmost capacity of the cars, and the latter are in such demand that the railroads are unable to supply the necessary number. Not only are the roads doing a business which would have been considered impossible a few years ago, but they are doing it at rates which would have been considered impossible a few years ago. Every road in the country is earning more money than it ever earned before, and the increase in the earnings of the railroads is not confined to any section of the country, but is general throughout the entire country. The Chicago roads are doing a business which would have been considered impossible a few years ago, and

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct 11, 1881, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is entitled to six delegates.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Republican County Convention.

For some days the various candidates for republican honors have been button-holing every delegate to the county convention as soon as elected or possible to reach them, and the air has been full of possible combinations against the slate made by the managers. Long before the hour of the convention it became apparent that some good men would have to be slaughtered to get them out of the way. And the day was appropriate for such a bloody and gloomy.

Great Manitou—delay in bringing the convention for order to order, but it was finally accomplished and the fight began.

The first struggle was over the numing of temporary chairman. Dr. Lewis nominated John Ward of Marion, but before the motion could be seconded and put P. E. Fogg of South Arm nominated J. C. McFellin of Evangeline. A division of the house was called for, and the Charlevoix faction was slapped in face by the defeat of Ward and the election of McFellin. To appease the rising wrath of the defeated faction, Dr. S. Graves was made temporary secretary. On those offices depended the appointment of the committees, and the seating of contested seats.

A brief recess was taken to allow the committee on credentials to make their report. When made, it ruled out delegate Mears, of Boyne Valley, and secured the slate nomination for judge of probate.

The report of the committee on organization made the temporary organization permanent.

After the settlement of minor details the balloting commenced.

For judge of probate J. A. Kent of South Arm received 19 votes to 13 for Wm. Means of Boyne Valley, on the first informal ballot, and this was declared unanimous by acclamation.

For register of deeds, F. J. Meech of Norwood received 26 votes, and was declared the nominee.

For county clerk, S. B. Thatcher of Springvale received 29 votes, which was practically unanimous.

For prosecuting attorney there were two ballots. On the first, Fred W. Mayne received 14 votes, and H. L. Corbett 18. On the second ballot, one vote changed from Mayne to Corbett, and the latter was declared nominated.

For sheriff there were two ballots. On the first A. J. Stroud received 17 votes, Richard Cooper 6, A. J. McLeod 5, Harrison Berdan 3. Stroud's majority on a roll was glory enough for him, it was a sufficient endorsement of his administration, and to avoid a certain defeat at the polls, he withdrew his name from the convention. On the last ballot Berdan received 18 votes, to 13 for Frank Myers, and one for Cooper.

For treasurer there were three live candidates, two of whom have been planning for months. The slate was broken on the fifth ballot. On the first, Byron Seo received 10 votes, W. C. Newman 11, and J. Reed Emrey 11. Emrey gained on each ballot, the last standing Emrey 18, Newman 7, Seo 6.

For circuit court commissioner, F. E. Fogg was nominated by acclamation, as was also E. K. Robinson for surveyor, and Drs. Graves and Sanderson for coroners.

In an attempt to appease the rightcons indignation of Fred Mayne, in suit was added to disappointment by naming him for chairman of the county committee, to plan the election of the ticket, a portion of which he had labored early and late, in caucus and convention, to defeat.

Butler at Petoskey.

Tuesday was a great day for Petoskey. A vast concourse of people from the surrounding country assembled to see and hear Gen. B. F. Butler, the people's candidate for president. The morning promised rain, which doubtless prevented many others from attending.

About seven hundred Butler men were in the procession, and it was estimated that there were four or five thousand people in the vicinity of the speaker's stand.

While waiting for the special train bearing Ben. Butler, Gov. Begole, and the party in attendance, speeches were made by Messrs. Hudson, of Manchester, Hill, of Boyne, Bartlett, of Hayes, and Hampton, of Harbor Springs. It was expected that S. O. Fisher, candidate for congress in the tenth district, would also be in attendance, but a failure to make connections at Mackinac prevented.

The train arrived at 4:50, and was driven about the principal streets of Petoskey, then to the speaker's stand, where he talked about thirty minutes, in the interests of the people's party, of which he is the founder and chief promoter. There is no doubt but he made many converts by his frank and forcible exposition of the needs of the workingman, whose cause he especially champions. His views on the tariff, if strictly followed would no doubt work a solution of this most vexed question.

At the conclusion of Butler's remarks, Gov. Begole was introduced, but did not make any extended remarks.

The party then repaired to the Occidental hotel for supper and a reception.

The Charlevoix party then returned home, and we do not know what the further program was, except that the party were to go to Mackinac and Cheboygan for an evening meeting.

The success of this meeting is due largely to the fine drum and bugle corps of S. Hampton, of the Harbor Springs Independent, who seemed to know what to do, when to do, and how to do everything,—even to talking against time while waiting for the train. Hampton's executive ability is most remarkable.

Notes and News.

True prohibitionists are everywhere deserting the republican party. That "artful dodger," James G. Blaine, drove thousands of honest voters into the ranks of the St. John party by his cowardly refusal to vote on the prohibitory amendment in Maine.

Grover Cleveland has too much business at home to permit him to swing around the circle making political speeches. His motto, apparently is business first, pleasure afterwards. And such a man we want to look after the people's business affairs at Washington.

Department Commander Rush J. Shank, of Lansing, in general order No. 5, says: "It is reported that comrades in various sections of the state are wearing the badge of the order on their coats by the side of political badges, thus implying that they, as Grand Army men, will support this or that candidate for office. Comrades, this practice cannot be condemned in too pronounced a manner. If we—as an order—are to maintain our present high standing, we must keep it disconnected from all political organizations. Comrades, don't display your G. A. R. badge by the side of political badges or emblems. Don't attend political meetings as posts or with your badge in a prominent position. Don't assume to speak for the order when you announce your own political preference. Remember that the G. A. R. is composed of comrades entertaining various views, all having equal rights as citizens and soldiers."—Ex.

Cleveland's welcome at Buffalo last week was one of the grandest demonstrations of the summer. Fifty thousand people standing in a drizzling rain to welcome a man charged with such a crime as he was, and this, too, right at the home of the man and the scene of the alleged misconduct, looks more like a complete vindication by his own people than anything else. The people at Cleveland's home evidently do not believe the dirty slanders circulated about him.

A fac simile of the Kennebec Journal of August, 1856, shows that James G. Blaine and James Baxter were its editors; that it carried the names of Millard Fillmore and Andrew Jackson Donaldson as candidates for president and vice-president; and below the ticket the words "Put none but Americans on guard!" Blaine therefore was not a republican supporting Fremont, but a Know-nothing, supporting the Know-nothing ticket. Carry the news to the Irish!

The republican party is like a last year's onion in springtime,—so nearly rotten that it stinks. But plant it—bury it out of sight in good ground,—and in a short time from out its heart will spring new and tender shoots (sweet to the taste of the laborer at his noonday meal) which, if properly cultivated, will become large and strong. Bury the party this year, and from its heart will spring a party, if properly cultivated, that will revolutionize American politics.

What Fusion Will Do.

Nothing ever done in politics in this country has so thoroughly bewildered politicians as has the bold, struggle movement of Gen. Butler in carrying into actual practice the tendency of his mind to "fight with the under dog." Take for instance the state of Michigan. It is hopeless ly republican. Its officers and lawmakers have grown to be arrogant and contemptuous of the rights of the minority. To-day, when it is apparent that the minority (democrats) and the independent (people's) vote has a reasonable prospect of success it is remarkable and remarked how deferential the republican press is toward Gen. Butler. That side of the house feel his force and calmly avoid stirring it up. The effect in Michigan will be that the rights of the minority will be considered and respected.—Father Columbia's Paper.

Prohibition must win. And if it does, the event will simply be history repeating itself. The liberty party of 1840-4, which supported J. G. Birney, for president, was the seed from which grew the abolition party under the name "republican." Millions of dollars in property (slaves) were at stake then, as the millions of "manufacturing interests" are now. The whig party was divided against itself, and it fell. The new party built on its ruins combined men favorable to that cause from every existing party. But not until "abolition" was dropped, and a milder name adopted. Before the prohibition party can hope to control the government, they must organize with a party name less objectionable. Their principles and aims may be the same as now, but the name must not represent the extreme. Voters must be led along and educated gradually. Emancipation as finally accomplished would have been repudiated by the men who elected Abraham Lincoln in 1860, if they could have known exactly what was coming. The republican party is today divided against itself, and is in the throes of dissolution; it will fall as did its predecessor, and upon its ruins will be built a party embodying its best features, with prohibition as its chief mission, but its name must be so toned down that the extreme of its mission will not be apparent to the average voter.

E. H. Green chanced to be in the room when the greenback caucus was organized Saturday evening, and he was unanimously elected to preside. Of course he declined.

Mr. Trowbridge, who lectured at the opera house Sunday evening on "Turkish missons," was greeted by a full house, and the discourse seemed to give excellent satisfaction.

On Tuesday afternoon before the convention came to order, at least one republican candidate was seen on his knees before a delegate,—it is presumed imploring him for support.

The needs of Charlevoix will be kept in view at Washington, by Judge Fallass, and if it is possible, our appropriations will be at a figure proportionate to the needs of the harbor.

Judge Fallass will get the support of at least two staunch republicans in Charlevoix county, who believe in his ability to represent this district as well if not better than any other man before the people.

The furnace, under Robert Young, who is the foreman of the establishment since Mr. Rockafellow's death, made 468 tons week before last. The largest day's work was 74½ tons.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Leonard Hull has rented his farm for four years, and traded other property for land in Tennessee, to which he will move and remain permanently if he likes the country. If he does not, he will be back in the spring.

On Saturday evening the greenback caucus was held at Lowis hall to elect delegates to the county convention, and the following were selected: Geo. Pappin, John Beil, Geo. W. Cook, and Alden Chamberlin.

Henry S. Cook, whose marriage is chronicled in another column, says he feels as young and frisky as thirty years ago, when his hair was not so white as now. May his years of wedded bliss continue to the full expectation of life.

The schooner James Mowatt, Capt. Crane master, is in port this week for pig iron. She is the largest vessel ever in this port, carrying 1,100 tons pig iron, or over 600 cords of wood. Capt. Crane is a brother of the popular clerk in Geo. Miller's clothing house.

The future of Charlevoix depends on the development of her harbor. Consequently we have a vital interest in the man who represents us at Washington. In this respect we believe Judge Fallass will work to give us all we are entitled to.

☞Preaching next Sunday morning at the M. E. church by the pastor. At the morning service there will be a missionary concert. It will consist of elegant singing and an address. Mr. Trowbridge will give some of his selections of the Turkish missions.

A crowding of two days work into one makes more business for the editor in order to save the compositors a little rest and get out the paper before attending the convention at Boyne to day. Consequently our report of the meeting of the doctors, and Butler at Petoskey is much abridged.

Unlike his opponent, Judge Fallass makes votes wherever he speaks instead of driving men out of the party. His address at East Jordan Saturday night is reported as one of the fair est, most convincing arguments of the campaign, so far, and the Judge made many friends of republicans heretofore considered solid for Cutcheon.

Secretary Teller has made an important decision in the northern Michigan land cases. He holds that all such entries on even sections are invalid and illegal, and that pre-emptions must be recognized. He revokes all orders of suspicion in such cases. The test cases decided are those of John B. Weimer, Patrick Murphy and Nicholas Kiedl, all against the Grand Rapids & Indiana. The railroad question is not involved, as the road has no claim to the even sections.

Burgess.

At a caucus held at Gibson's school house Oct. 6th, Oscar Tilldesen, Geo. Williams, and Isaac S. Webster, were chosen delegates to the greenback county convention, to be held at Boyne to day.

The friends of Wm. Gibson, formerly of Hayes, were grieved to hear of his death. He has been in Vanderbilt for the last year. He had typhoid fever.

Mrs. Kane who has been visiting her sons, Frank and Peter Kane, intends to return to her home in the south part of the state soon.

The mother of Mrs. Sutter, post mistress of Burgess, is making her daughter a visit.

The infant son of Peter Kane is quite sick.

Historical Society.

The annual meeting of the Historical Society was held at the parlors of Mrs. E. H. Green, Tuesday evening.

The society adjourned after passing a very pleasant time, to meet on Tuesday evening next, at the parlors of the Bridge street house, at which time will occur the annual election of officers. A full attendance is greatly desired as there will be important business to transact.

The Doctors in Council.

Last Friday afternoon the physicians of Charlevoix county organized a County Medical Society, with the following officers:

President—Dr. David C. Chamberlain, of Norwood.

First Vice President—Dr. Levi Lewis, of Charlevoix.

Second Vice President—Dr. Estelle Long, of Bay Springs.

Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. Schuyler Graves, of Charlevoix.

A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws, which will be presented for adoption at the next meeting of the society, Nov. 7th.

The balance of the session was devoted to the discussion of matters of interest chiefly to the profession.

In the evening, the doctors with their wives assembled at the parlors of the Bridge Street House, and after a brief season of social intercourse, repaired to the dining room where a specially-prepared banquet was in waiting. The following will perhaps give a fair idea of the good things spread before the ravenished guests:

SOUP.
Oyster.
COLD DISHES.
Raw Oysters. Sliced Ham. Sliced Chicken, Sliced Turkey, garnished with Lemon.
RELISHES.
Cucumber Pickles. Sweet Spiced Apples.
FRUITS.
Apples. Grapes. Pears. Bananas. Peaches.
PASTRY AND DESSERT.
Assorted Cake. Crackers. Raised Biscuit. Lemon Ice Cream. Vanilla Ice Cream. Tea. Coffee.

After the banqueters had satisfied the cravings of the physical system, Dr. Graves, as toast master, reminded them that there was also a mental feast in store.

Dr. Chamberlain, as president of the association, responded in a few pleasing words to the toast, "Welcome to Conference."

"The Medical Profession in General, and the Charlevoix County Association in Particular," was responded to by Dr. Carbrick, in which he feelingly portrayed various phases of a physician's life.

"Pioneer Medicine, or Physic as it was Practiced in this County Fifteen Years Ago," was responded to by Dr. Lewis. Like all other pioneers, he pictured in most graphic manner, the obstacles, the trials, to be overcome by every village and in every city with new United resources, and to take his say in the economy of the country, of whatever happens to be most convenient in the way of "physic."

"The Ladies." Toast was responded to by Dr. Preston in his usual happy manner.

"The Press." Toast was responded to briefly by Chas. A. Strang, of the JOURNAL.

After the banquet, the party returned to the parlors, where an hour or more was passed in pleasant social chat.

The day as a whole is an event in Charlevoix county, and long to be remembered by the participants. May its anniversary in coming years be honored with like results.

Communication.

A scurrilous article which appeared in last week's JOURNAL requires some notice. If the editor of the Southwick sheet saw as much dishonesty in "dimes" speeches, why did not he or some other smart money at the Petoskey caucus up and confound him while he was making speeches in his vicinity, and not wait until he got home and then vent his venomous feelings and misrepresentation. The statement of Burdell receiving ten dollars a week and boarding around is an absolute falsehood, as I have means of knowing. Such lies and such abuse of an honest man will not help the planed knight's party. Uso.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

The Calcium Light of Calm Logic Thrown Upon His Unsavory Record.

Convicted by His Own Words and Writing of Deliberate Falsehoods.

The Tattooed Man Fittingly Compared to the English Gift-Taker, Lord Bacon.

Blaine's Political Record Exhibited in the Fullness of Its Corruption.

An Earnest and Eloquent Plea for Official and National Honor.

Carl Schurz's Great Detroit Speech.

Altho[ugh] I assert that the Republican party has declared against the continuance of the present tariff, the Democratic party has not declared for its reduction. I mean that the Democratic party has not declared in favor of reducing the tariff to the point of a revenue standard. I have for this reason no right to claim that the party has pledged itself to reduce the tariff. I have for this reason no right to charge that the party has been recreant to its pledges if it has made such pledges. I have for this reason no right to charge that the party has been recreant to its pledges if it has not reduced the tariff to the point of a revenue standard. I have for this reason no right to charge that the party has been recreant to its pledges if it has not reduced the tariff to the point of a revenue standard, and that was this, that Mr. Blaine had asked Mr. Mulligan if he would not let him have those letters to him, at least to permit him to look at them. Mr. Mulligan permitted that upon the promise of Mr. Blaine that as soon as he had taken copies of them he would send them to Mr. Mulligan, and so he did. Thereupon Mr. Blaine wanted to look at them once more. Mr. Mulligan put them into his hands again, and Mr. Blaine put them in his pocket, telling he was going to show them to Mr. Mulligan, and put them into his pocket.

But this story, which has been hashed over the whole country as the "Mulligan letters," was not an innocent one. It was a story which feared that after all further concealment had become impossible Mr. Blaine would have the audacity to step forward himself in the House of Representatives and, in order to dazzle and mislead the people, publish them in such a way that nobody could make head or tail of them, and then when they opened in the papers and people could look at them in detail not be able to understand.

Let me explain this to you. And here I will say that I shall select only one set of them, because I do not like to weary you. I intend to give you every great detail, and then will teach you, out of Mr. Blaine's own mouth and pen, what kind of a public character Mr. Blaine is.

The first one of Mr. Blaine's letters that I am going to read to you is as follows:

MT. DEAR MR. FISHER: I thank you for the article in the Mercantile. It is good in every way, and will do good. He writes like a man of large intelligence and a comprehensive mind. I shall not refuse to be a participant in the new railroad project, and every respect as named in your letter, but I do not like to be known as the owner of the Little Rock road. I thank you very sincerely for your kind offer to assist me in any way, and I shall not forget it. Soon what seems a fair offer to dispose of my interest will be made to me. If not, I do not like to be the owner of it. I do not like the position desired, but I could not refuse to be a participant in the new railroad project, and every respect as named in your letter. Yours truly, JAMES G. BLAINE.

Now, you see, this was what seemed a fair offer to dispose of Mr. Blaine's interest in the road. If not, he did not like to be the owner of it. He did not like the position desired, but I could not refuse to be a participant in the new railroad project, and every respect as named in your letter. Yours truly, JAMES G. BLAINE.

Now, you see, this was what seemed a fair offer to dispose of Mr. Blaine's interest in the road. If not, he did not like to be the owner of it. He did not like the position desired, but I could not refuse to be a participant in the new railroad project, and every respect as named in your letter. Yours truly, JAMES G. BLAINE.

The rumor was that the bonds had been bought from Mr. Blaine, and that the bonds had passed into his hands; and that, assuming the road was going like Hayes or Garfield, the next subsidy he should get in Congress would be for the Little Rock Pacific Railroad to Mr. Blaine himself, and that is Mr. Blaine himself.

In 1876 certain rumors arose of the Union Pacific Railroad Company having purchased a lot of Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds, and having paid 75 cents on the dollar of coupons. That lot of bonds, it was said, was worth in the market at that time about something like fifty or sixty cents on the dollar.

Grandma's Angel.

"Mamma said: 'Little one, go and see
If Grandmother's ready to come to tea.'
I knew I mustn't disturb her, so
I stepped as gently along, tiptoe,
And stood a moment to take a peep—
And there was Grandmother fast asleep!

"I knew it was time for her to wake;
I thought I'd give her a little shake,
Or lay at her door or softly call;
But I stood at the heart for that at all—
So, noiseless as sweet and as quiet there,
Upon her bed in her black arm-chair,
With her dear white hair, and a little smile,
That means she's loving you all the while.

"I did n't make a speck of a noise;
I knew she was dreaming of little boys
And girls who lived with her long ago,
And then went to Heaven—she told me so.

"I went up close, and I did n't speak
One word, but I gave her on her cheek
The softest bit of a little kiss,
Just in a whisper, and then said this:
'Grandmother dear, it's time for tea.'

"She opened her eyes and looked at me,
And said: 'Why, Pet, I have just now Dreamed
Of a little angel who came and seemed
To kiss me lovingly on my face;'
She pointed right at the very place!

"I never told her 't was only me;
I took her hand, and we went to tea."
—Sydney Dayre, in St. Nicholas for April.

Edenic Diet.

The Alta Californian says: The half-dozen cranks who for the sake of notoriety, are promoting a rare vegetable-eating association, held a mutual admiration society the other day. Before the meeting commenced an angular female with a complexion something like a well-worn saddle that had been out in the rain, took it upon herself to interview an Alta reporter. She commenced by asking his name, age, occupation, salary, and mode of life, and, on being informed that he was an Irish nobleman in disguise, working on the Alta for $1,000 a month, she demanded to know why the Alta had not paid more attention to the "Edenic diet," as she was pleased to style raw turnips and other cattle food. The reporter replied that the Edenic scheme had been somewhat frowned down by the Alta editors because the promoters of the scheme were not consistent.

"Now you are real mean to say we are not thoroughly consistent. We never eat any animal food and never cook anything," replied the rather damaged looking vestal.

"You claim to follow the example of our first parents as an excuse for reposing into the savage habits of the Digger Indians; if they consider the example of Adam and Eve so good in one way, then why not in another? Why don't you go in for the whole of the Eden business?" asked the reporter.

"What do you mean, sir?" asked the pioneer damsel, looking about the same as the girl who finds that the long-wished-for sealskin given her by Augustus is one of the Cairo street brand.

"If you admire the Eden style of grub so much, why don't you tackle the Eden costume, too? Discard your drapery and bifurcated skirts, and prance around in a fig-leaf apron. That would suit your style of beauty about as well as raw potatoes and wheat will an ordinary christian stomach," replied the reporter.

"What, me walk around nearly n—! Oh, its too horrid! Besides I should be arrested by the police, and then, think, too, all the weavers and spinners and milliners would be ruined," rejoined the female, irately.

"Can't you have as much regard for the cooks, waiters, bakers and restaurateurs as you have for milliners and such?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, it's no use arguing with you, I see; you scoff at everything you don't understand," said the Edenic pronuncer as she closed the interview and the door with simultaneous bangs.

Autograph-Hunters.

When the autograph craze first began the disease was of a mild type. The collector was moderate content with a signature. That no longer satisfies. He wants a letter addressed to him personally—"on any subject you please," as a ventilated dead wrecker to me the other day. He wishes to flourish this letter in the faces of his hapless acquaintances, in order to prove that he is on familiar terms with the celebrated Sound-So. The devices he employs to achieve this end are ingenious and inexhaustible. For example, he drops you a line to inquire in what year you first printed your beautiful poem entitled A Psalm of Life. If you are a simple soul, you hasten to assure him that you are not the author of that poem, which he must have confused with your Rime of the Ancient Mariner—and there you are! The insidious person knew very well that you didn't write the Psalm of Life. Another trick is to inquire of you if your father's middle name was not Hieroglitus. Now, your father has probably been dead many years, and as perhaps he was not a distinguished man in his day, you are naturally touched that any one should have interest in him after this lapse of time. In the innocence of your heart you reply by the next mail that your father's middle name was not Hieroglitus, but Epaminonitas—and there you are again!

A still more offensive, because dissimulating, stratagem is that of the correspondent who informs you that he is replenishing his library, and requests a detailed list of your works, with the respective dates of their publication, prices, etc. This has an air of business. The inference is that the correspondent, who writes in a brisk, commercial manner, wishes to fill out his collection of your books, or possibly to purchase a complete set in crushed Levant morocco. Lay not that flattering inference to thy soul, thou too unworldly dreamer! A year or so later this same person, having forgotten that he has already demanded a chronological list of your writings, sends you another application, couched in the selfsame words! The length of time it takes him to "replenish" his library (with your works) is something pathetic. This particular species of autograph-hunter probably does not care a copper for your autograph from a literary point of view. From a mercantile point of view he cares a great deal, and likes to get three or four copies a year, for he compiles small volumes of autographs, and sells them. It must be a poor trade, however. If the same amount of persistence and industry it demands of him were put into a corner-grocery, he would speedily make his fortune.—April Atlantic.

Which Way do You Circle?

One generally reads that persons walking without land-marks perform a large circle and cut their old tracks again. This circling, as far as my present knowledge goes, is to the left.

My present theory is that in most persons the right leg is the stronger and the more forward to step over any obstacles, and hence that it slightly outwalks the left; this theory involving as further consequences that those in whom the left leg is the stronger would circle to the right, while those whose legs are of equal strength would either keep straight on, or would wander either way indifferently. I imagine this "outwalking" of one leg by the other to be similar to the manner in which a body of troops wheels to one side or the other.

In the following I use the expression "right-legged." By this I mean that the right leg is that chosen to kick with, jump from, etc.

My negative evidence is as follows: 1. I myself am right-legged, and in a mist I always circle to the left. I have only come across cases similar to my own in these respects. On the other hand, my left arm has been trained (by always rowing on the bow side) to be stronger than my right for rowing purposes; and in sculling I always circle to my right side.

2. Those colleagues of whom I have read that they could keep a straight course without any landmark, were also represented as using both arms (and legs?) impartially.

I have given the above evidence chiefly to show how work it is, in the hope that some of your readers will try to collect data of the following nature from any of their acquaintance who have had experience in the matter:

(a) To which side, if any, do they circle?

It might also be interesting to learn from boating friends if they have observed any connection between the side on which they have been accustomed to row and the side to which they circle in sculling; such connection as that indicated above.

Finally, I may suggest that more might be known on the question of the heredity of right or left sidedness; and as to whether persons are often right-armed but left-legged, etc. But it must be remembered that tendencies of this nature are often "educated out" in childhood.—W. Larden, in Nature.

More Definite.

"Didn't you say Jimson was a first-class salesman and a gentleman?" asked the boss, of a merchant traveler, relative to a new man who had proved quite the contrary.

"No, sir, I did not," was the emphatic reply.

"Well, I do not wish to impugn your veracity, but I am willing to make an affidavit to the effect that you told me you could say he was an excellent man in every respect."

"That's what I did say, sir."

"Why did you deny it, then?"

"I didn't deny it."

"I say you did."

"I beg your pardon; I said I could say that he was a first-class salesman and a gentleman, but I didn't say so, nor would I unless required to tell a lie, and say a man in my profession never lies; that is, hardly ever."

"Oh—ah! indeed!" exclaimed the boss, "I should have been more particular, and, sir, you should have been more definite."—Breakfast Traveler.

His Expectations.

A Chicago man, who was induced to purchase a large interest in a hole in the ground in Nevada, said to contain silver, went to Virginia City to get some closer idea of how matters stood. A professional mine inspector was called in, and, after some talk, he said:

"My charges will be $50 a day, whether I discover anything or not."

"Suppose you discover that half of this mine is worth $100,000?"

"Then you will probably present me with $500."

"And if you should discover that I have paid $18,000 for a half interest in a hole which won't pan out $200—what then?"

"Why, I should then expect the man who sold it to you to present me with at least a thousand!"

Anecdote from the Cow-Boy Country

Two ladies, one from the East and the other from the West, were sitting last summer on the verands of one of our fashionable frontier hotels in Miles City chatting together, when two cattle men, clad in leather pants, buckskin shirts and sombreros, rode up.

"Oh, my," exclaimed the Eastern lady, "there are some of those horrid cow-boys; let us go inside."

"Why, you weekly," cried the little Western woman, "that's my husband," pointing to the foremost horseman.

"And the other?" inquired the Eastern lady.

"My brother," said the Western lady.—Chicago Tribune Letter.

The County Ticket.

Pursuant to call the democratic convention to nominate county officers assembled at the Pine Lake house, Boyne, last Thursday, Oct. 9th.

The convention was called to order by J. Milo Eaton, chairman of the county committee, who nominated E. M. Clark as temporary chairman. Chas. J. Strang, was elected secretary.

A committee of three on credentials were appointed, consisting of D. B. Jerrine, C. J. Grier, and C. Schaub, who reported the following delegates present:

Bear Lake—E. C. Pinkerton, Sixth Forsith, Boyne Valley—P. Dell and M. Jickerson, with authority from the citizens to cast the full vote of the township.

Chandler—Not represented, but the member of the county committee, A. F. Bentley, being present, was allowed to represent the township.

Charlevoix—L. L. Bartholomew, C. J. Grier, E. M. Clark, Chas. Kelly, Chas. J. Strang, O. B. Weed, Ben. Weaver, Jay, 65 strong.

Evangeline—E. M. Caldwell, A. E. Martin, C. Schaub, Jos. B. Fellows, Chas. Bender, A. J. Tillotson, Chas. Smith, Frank Colcomb.

Eveline—Ammon J. Beers, Asa Smith, A. B. Noyes, E. Wilson, Pat. Ames, A. M. Talley.

Hayes—S. A. Reed Est. Smith, E. H. Bennett, John Newstead.

Hudson—Not represented.

Marion—Wm. Miller and Wm. Vesburg, with authority of caucus to cast full vote of the township.

Melrose—J. H. Lyman, and S. P. Lord.

Norwood—O. D. Hilson, Edwin Cook, George Gilday, Alfred Vanderveen.

Resort—Not represented.

South Arm—D. B. Jerrine, P. Walsh, S. C. Isaman authorized by convention to cast full vote of township.

Springvale—Not represented.

Wilson—Chas. Burch, authorized by convention to represent the township.

The temporary organization was made permanent, and the convention proceeded directly to business.

J. Milo Eaton made a verbal report of the action of the committee of conference appointed at the June convention, consisting on the part of the democrats of J. Milo Eaton, L. D. Bartholomew, and Chas. J. Strang, and on the part of the greenbackers of T. J. Hill, O. Blair and Oscar Tillotson; which committee agreed to give the greenbackers the nomination of clerk, register, treasurer, and one coroner, and the democrats the nomination of sheriff, judge of probate, prosecuting attorney, circuit court commissioner, surveyor, and one coroner.

The report was accepted and adopted.

The convention then proceeded to an informal ballot for sheriff, resulting as follows:

Whole number of votes cast	55
Pierce Atwell	1
D. B. Jerrine	11
H. F. Ingalls	43

Mr. Ingalls' nomination was made unanimous by acclamation.

For the office of prosecuting attorney, the name of Henry A. Jersey was the only one presented, and he was nominated by acclamation.

A. M. Easton was also nominated for judge of probate by acclamation.

For surveyor the names of Sidney Hayden and Wm. Miller were presented. On the first informal ballot, Hayden received 2 votes and Miller 52. Miller's nomination was made unanimous by acclamation.

For circuit court commissioner Arthur E. Martin was nominated by acclamation.

For one coroner, S. G. Isaman was nominated by acclamation.

A committee of three, to notify the greenback convention of the action of the democratic convention and to ask their endorsement of the same, was appointed, consisting of A. B. Noyes, E. C. Plettenberg, and Asa Smith.

A recess was then taken until reports could be received from the other convention.

After the greenbackers had concluded their work, the democratic convention reassembled, and received the report that the action of the committee had been adopted, and nominations had been made as follows:

Clerk—Wm. F. Palmater.
Register—Elisha H. Shepard.
Treasurer—Orlando Blair.
Coroner—Chas. W. Butcher.

Also that they had endorsed the nominations of the democratic convention.

On motion the nominees of the greenback convention were endorsed and a communication to that effect forwarded by the committee previously appointed.

The name of Chas. E. Burch was presented as a member of the county committee from Wilson township. Also the name of Oren Miller from Hudson township.

A vote of thanks was tendered A. J. Hall for the use of his house for the convention.

The convention then adjourned.

It would be difficult to conceive a more harmonious meeting than this. The allowance of full votes of 2 votes to the delegation, gave each township its complete representation as was possible without their actual presence. The election by ballot in every case of more than one candidate, gave every man an equal chance in the convention.

It is a strong ticket, and stands an excellent chance of election, from top to bottom.

THE GREENBACK CONVENTION.

The greenback convention assembled at Lewis hall, at Boyne, at the same hour as the democratic. John Bell was elected chairman, and Jas. Slaur secretary.

T. J. Hill reported the action of the committee of conference, which was accepted and adopted unanimously.

The convention then balloted informally for candidate for register of deeds, with the following result:

Whole number of votes	36
E. H. Shepard	14
Richard Lake	10

The convention then proceeded to a formal ballot and elected E. H. Shepard, as follows:

Shepard	24
Lake	12

W. F. Palmater was nominated for clerk, Orlando Blair for treasurer, and C. W. Butcher for coroner, by acclamation.

The action of the democratic convention was endorsed unanimously.

The following county committee was appointed by the chair:

Bear—Oscar Tillotson.
Resort—S. S. Shepard.
South Arm—P. S. Bullbert.
Melrose—George Manderee.
Wilson—John A. Newcomb.
Bear Lake—Geo. Forsith.
Eveline—Walter Manley.
Charlevoix—Orlando Blair.
Norwood—Lucius Pratt.
Boyne Valley—Robert Findley.
Evangeline—M. Houghton.

The following executive committee were elected:

Chairman—T. J. Hill.
Secretary—E. H. Shepard.
Treasurer—O. Blair.

The convention then adjourned.

Upon full and reliable information the democrats feel entirely certain of carrying New York for Cleveland. Indiana is also morally certain for the democrats, and this, with the south, elects Cleveland. New Jersey is certain and Wisconsin and Michigan are likely to add to the sacking strength of the democracy. There is also a fighting chance in Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. There is no longer any reasonable doubt of the election of Cleveland, while a complete republican break-down is not unlikely. Ingham Democrat.

Mr. Blaine presented the question at Elyria: "Shall American labor be protected?" The miners of the Hocking Valley who struck against sixty five cents a day, and are in consequence driven from the mines and from their homes by Mr. Blaine's syndicate, are possibly interested in its not to mention the men, women, and children who are laboring in Jackson and Lewis counties of the same State for from fifteen to twenty-five cents a day. New York Graphic.

Gen. John F. Farnsworth vouches for it as a fact that Gen. Logan did influence a number of young men of Illinois to join the Confederate army he intended to enter it himself, but finally saw there was better picking north for a soldier of fortune and remained. —Buffalo Courier.

No candid man can read the Mulligan letters without being convinced that Blaine sold his official influence for gain, and then lied about it in a most brazen way to escape detection. Ingham Democrat.

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1884, at 2 o'clock, p. m., for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district composed of the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is to be entitled to delegates, as follows:

By order of COMMITTEE.

The Democratic electors are requested to meet on Tuesday, Oct. 21st, at the usual hour and place, before which time a primary meeting will be held in each township, for the purpose of electing delegates to the county convention, to be held on Wednesday, Oct. 22nd, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating county officers, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

By order of COMMITTEE.

Greenback Representative Convention.

A representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, October 14th, 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature from the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

By order of COMMITTEE.

Ohio only 8,000 Republican.

A special by telephone received this morning states that returns from the entire state of Ohio give a republican majority of 8,000.

October Elections.

With the exception of a few returns from the more remote districts, the republican gubernatorial majority in Ohio, last year, will prove somewhat greater than the majority of that year. Republicans claim 20,000 and democrats concede 15,000, but other claims are likely to reduce these figures. In 1880 the republican majority in October was over 27,000, and in November over 30,000. Whatever may be the result of doubting the past two years, both in Ohio and Indiana, democratic gains have been fully equalled by republican gains, and Wisconsin, has been fully equalling the record of both. Ohio and Indiana have been considered doubtful, although republicans have confidently claimed that they would be carried by large majorities.

The Candidates.

Of the candidates named for those interested in the [illegible] we have little to say. [illegible] to know something of the [illegible] of the [illegible] ment of this county for the ensuing two years.

JUDGE OF PROBATE.

J. Milo Eaton is too well known in this county to need any eulogy here. A native of New England, he came to Michigan, and graduated from the law department of Michigan univer sity in 1875. In that year he located in Charlevoix, in the practice of law, and since that time has had a hand in pretty much everything pertaining to the growth and prosperity of the village and surroundings. In addition to his law, real estate, insurance, and other business, he has served the people one term as prosecuting attorney, four years as judge of probate, one term as president of the village, has been, and is now, a member of the school board, and of the village council. In 1880 he was candidate for state senator against Archie Buttars, running ahead of his ticket in every town where he was well known. Having had experience as judge of probate, and knowing the necessity for accurate, well-kept records, he will make an officer in whom the people can have confidence. Residing at the county seat, and having an office always open, the business of the court can be transacted any day in the year, instead of once or twice a month, as is the case when the judge resides in some other part of the county.

SHERIFF.

Benjamin F. Ingalls represents the younger element of democracy who are partisan because of their faith in the broad, unchanging principles of liberty as enunciated by the original defenders of the faith. Only 36 years of age, he has all the physical requisites of the office to which he is called and will make a sheriff in fact as well as in name. He has been a resident of Emmet and Charlevoix counties 19 years, having been engaged at Petoskey in the mercantile trade five years, and in real estate three years. He has a wide acquaintance, and his popularity is attested by his election three times to the office of sheriff in Emmet county, the first election occurring within one month after attaining the age of 21 years. His home is now at Boyne, where he has made many friends during the past year.

COUNTY TREASURER.

Orlando Blair like many of Charlevoix county citizens, came from New York state. He was born in Washington county, in 1817. He passed the first 23 years of his life on a farm. Following Horace Greeley's advice he came west in 1870, and settled in Grand Rapids. First came to Grand Traverse region in 1874, and liking the climate and having faith in the future of our county, he settled permanently in Charlevoix where he has remained ever since. His business career has well fitted him for the office to which he is named, having been employed by Cresswell, Greer & Co., and their successors, as paymaster while engaged in building the New York and Canada railroad, in which capacity large sums of money passed through his hands. His success in their employment was due to the practical knowledge of book keeping and the fact that he is a thorough accountant. Later he represented Mc. Mills, in the head of Haywood & Mills, lumbermen, of Cusanovia, Mich. In politics he is a greenbacker, and is now a most ardent Butlerite. He is known as the original greenbacker of Charlevoix, having been at one time the only elector in Charlevoix township to vote the greenback ticket. Mr. Blair has twice held the office of supervisor in his town, both times being elected by a large majority by his friend, over a strong republican opponent, and this single fact is strong green back doctrine. If there be any of our business men who do not change their republican opinion, history will soon repeat itself by giving him a good round majority this fall for county treasurer.

REGISTER OF DEEDS.

Elisha H. Shepard is 55 years old and is a representative of that class of working men who begin with nothing and build for themselves a home, a business, and a standing among his people. The death of his father when he was 16 years old, left upon him the support of five younger brothers and sisters. He served an apprentice ship at the carpenter's trade, saved something, traded a farm with a [illegible] had everything in 1861, and came to Charlevoix county to begin new. Taught school, worked at any honest labor necessary to keep things moving, and at his trade when possible. He is a total abstainer from the use of tobacco and liquor in all forms, and always an active temperance man. Was a republican until 1877. Helped to organize the greenback party in Ingham county, and cast one of only three votes in Stockbridge township that year. In 1880 was nominated by acclamation for county clerk of Ingham county, by the greenback party. Has been secretary of the greenback county committee during his residence in this county, and always active in organizing and working at the polls for the success of the party. Was last Thursday unanimously re-elected secretary for the ensuing two years. He is entitled to and should receive the vote of every workin man in the county. If elected he will give personal attention to the duties of the office.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Henry A. Jersey was born at Remeo, Macomb county Michigan, December 15, 1850. In the spring of 1865, removed to a farm in Ionia county. Here he engaged in farm labor, working summers and going to school winters. His parents were poor and much of the hard work of the farm necessary to maintain a large family, of which he was the second child and eldest son, fell upon his shoulders. When in his eighteenth year his health failed and his strength being made mate to the severe toil of the farm, he was permitted to return to Romeo where he worked for his board in the winter and went to school at the Dickinson's institute. In the spring he returned home and placed himself under the tutorage of Charles W. Borst, of Greenville, Mich., one of the finest teachers of the English branches and mathmatics in Michigan. He worked vacations in the harvest field and wherever he could find employment and taught school winters to enable him to continue his course of study. He graduated from the academic course in the Greenville union school in 1873. In the fall of the same year with the "class of 77" he entered the literary department of Michigan University in the latin and scientific course, where his conduct won for him the commendations of his professors. But means failed and he was not able to complete his course, and did not return with his class the second year. He taught school and obtained means whereby he was enabled to enter upon the study of the law. He entered the office of ex-congressman. C. C. Ellsworth and John Lewis, of Greenville, Mich., and after studious application and a thorough reading of the standard treatises on common law, he was admitted to the bar of Montcalm county, January 15, 1877, passing a fine examination. Since which time he has engaged in the practice of his profession in Ionia county, and in Charlevoix county, to which latter place he removed two years ago. He has gained success in his profession by his study and gift as a speaker. He is a man of good habits and is proud to boast that he has never known the taste of beer or intoxicating liquors, never used tobacco or smoked a cigar. He is a man of comprehensive information and can discuss readily and intelligently all the great questions that agitate the thought of the world.

COUNTY CLERK.

William F. Palmiter, one of the publishers of the East Jordan Enterprise, came from Oceana county in 1881. He is a graduate of Ludden, Ont., commercial college, and is now 38 years old. He has been a greenbacker 12 years, and as such held various township offices in Oceana county. Became a justice of the peace one term, and is the present supervisor from South Arm township.

CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONER.

Arthur E. Martin is a native of Oakland county, Mich., and is 38 years old. He grew up on a farm in Eaton county; read law two years; taught school in Charlotte; reengaged in farming; again read law, and was admitted to the bar of Eaton county, April 25, 1883. Removed to Boyne in November, 1883, and is a member of the law firm of Norton, Kent & Martin. He is a democrat from a careful study of its principles. A fellow citizen, who knew him at his home and in his studies, says he is scrupulously honest, his character and reputation are unassailable, and he has a broad sense of justice in dealing with his fellow man,—eminent qualifications for the office for which he is named.

SURVEYOR.

William Miller is a man with much experience. He came to this county in 1866, from New York. At the organization of the county he was elected surveyor, and held the office until 1876, when he went to Arkansas and remained seven years. Returning to his old home in Marion in April, 1883, he was appointed deputy county surveyor, which office he now holds. He also had experience in the business in New York, and in Arkansas. He has been a democrat all his life, except about eight years during the infancy and early purity of the republican party.

CORONERS.

Solomon G. Isaman, of South Arm, is a man of large experience, 43 years old. He settled in South Arm in 1866, is a veteran of the war, and was a republican to 1867. Has dabbled in politics a little, serving the people two terms as township treasurer, and once as coroner.

Charles W. Dutcher, of Boyne Falls, is a native of New York, 44 years old. Served during the war in the 93d O. V. I. Lived 23 years in Cleveland, and followed ship-building. Since coming to Michigan has been a farmer and lumberman. Held the office of justice of the peace two terms; and trustee of his township in Ohio one term.

REASONS.—First, we have $50,000 in Real Property, held by law to protect our depositors. All State Savings Banks, or other State Banks offering to do a savings business, are required by law to annually invite for deposits a statement of Stock taken; and that is often fictitious. National banks only are required to publish a statement. Second, we do a general banking business. Third, we believe it is foolish, and with our friends it is criminal.

BY THE DEEP, SAD SEA.

BY ANNA E. MORE.

Down by the deep, sad sea,
The foam-capped waves now lash the shore,
Bowling a sure, hard dirge to me
Of my whole day of pain.

The soft wind kisses my tear-wet cheek,
With my whole heart I love it yet,
While I murmur to the ether-bird, dear to me,
Down in the deep, sad sea.

Down 'neath the deep, blue sea
Its hath one, too, dear to me, for aye!
He lies even 'neath the waves of woe,
Or hideous night with spray.

The coral reefs are and his rest,
The seaweeds plume his head;
He lies even 'neath the waves of woe,
Down by the deep, sad sea.

Down by the deep, sad sea
A heart is breaking, oh, see! hapes on high,
The sad sea murmurs, sighs and wails
In sympathy the wind is so nigh.

Hope on, fond heart! In the vista of years,
When life ends and I meet you, beyond the dark,
The water-boy will awake to hear
His heaven, from his home 'neath the sea.

MARGARET.

BY LIZZ M. CORY.

He might have been very comfortable, sitting there by the window, the sunlight had slipped away, leaving only a mild reflection, and Margaret became snuffing up with a plea ant, sulky air. He might have been very comfortable but for one thing—a twinge saying conscience. The enlargement light fired the great diamond of his fingering, and he diverted his thoughts for a moment; then they returned to the subject of his uneasiness.

It only he had not come to this place! And yet how pleasant it had been, here on the peaceful New England coast, in the old seacaptain's house. How thoroughly he had enjoyed the bay, the sailing, the fishing with line and reel! How many splendid breakfasts he had handed! Margaret, too—ah! Margaret! His conscience was at him again.

He stood up restlessly and looked at himself in the glass. He was growing stronger every day; the long illness, from which he had come here to recuperate, was a shadow of the past. His friends, which was to say his mother and Elmer, would be delighted at the transformation. It was Elmer's last letter that had brought him to his senses, reminded him of his obligations, namely to get up from this place at once and join his mother and his betrothed at a fashionable summer resort.

He took his straw hat and went down into the piazza. Margaret was sitting there, slim and pretty in her white afternoon dress. She looked up as he approached; and he felt still guiltier. He sat down on the steps at her feet, and sighed faintly.

She stopped the motion of her rocking-chair and asked:

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing; only I feel sad at going away."

"Going away?" she repeated slowly. "Are you going away sooner than—than you thought?"

"I'm afraid I shall have to. I've received a letter." Mrs. Elmer Hood's from my mother, and really think I must go tomorrow."

Margaret began to rock again, not speaking for some moments. Then she said quietly:

"We shall miss you very much—mother and I."

"You have both been very good to me."

"Perhaps we shall hear from you sometimes," she suggested. "You won't forget us, quite."

There was always a plaintive note in her voice, a voice that one might more easily be enamored of than of its possessor. For she was not a beauty, Miss Margaret. She was too brown, too agile, too sparrow-like.

"Indeed, I shall never forget you," he answered, soberly. "I have written much about you to my mother and Miss Hastings."

"Miss Hastings?"

"Yes." For the moment he fairly hated himself; but he was determined to be honest at last. "Miss Elmer Hastings. We are to be married in the autumn."

Then neither spoke. Glancing up into her face presently, he found it passive, a trifle pale, perhaps, lashes. Maybe it was only his fancy; maybe she did not care, after all. He bowed so. Then he rose unsteadily.

"I am going into town to the village," he said.

But Margaret did not offer to accompany him. And so he turned away and left her there, presently.

"I hope she doesn't mind. Poor little girl! How I shall miss her, dear! One thing, I'll never board again with a widow and a young lady daughter. I only hope she won't think me too contrite. I hope she won't think me flirt—and, a few soft speeches, a pressure of the hand at times—wrong, of course."

The tide was out and the skiff clung to the sand. He pushed off shadily into deep water.

He had been out to the shallow a couple of hours, or less, but always with Margaret in the foreground. And to the growing dusk which hid her he murmured:

"Margaret, I love you my life."

She was leaning out as if for the wind and ready to set up her boat.

"I am glad I know," she said.

He went a little; then he spoke again:

"I must go back home," he said in a commanding voice.

"I suppose so," she answered, without sign of emotion.

"I might have known! What am I that he should care for me? Oh, Richard, Richard!"

Meanwhile Richard Lester found it rather pleasant out under the "Ledge." Now, that the "murder was out," he could breathe more easily. He fastened the rope of his boat around a rock, and went up higher. He sat down where the sun had dried away the dampness, and contemplated. He presumed he should be happy as Elmer's husband. Elmer was considered handsome; she was wealthy, refined, accomplished; she dressed in excellent taste and moved in the best society. His mother worshiped her. She, Elmer, was twenty-three years old; six years his junior. Poor little Margaret could not be ever eighteen, he supposed. Poor little brown bird!

Then his thoughts took a wider range. He forgot where he was; he grew utterly oblivious to the fading sunlight or the water rising slowly about the rocks.

The lapping, limpid, lingering water, musical and incessant.

There was no Margaret present to remind him.

"The rocks are covered at high water."

Margaret had been kneeling by her bed for a long, long time—hours, perhaps—when she heard her mother calling.

"Coming, directly," she answered, and went down to the sitting-room. There were no tear-marks on her faces, only a pen pallor.

"Where is Mr. Lester, Margaret?"

"I don't know, mother. Is it near supper-time?"

"Yes; it is getting late. I thought surely you would know where he was."

The words hurt Margaret, innocently as they had been spoken; but she only replied mildly:

"He went away a long while ago. He was going out to the 'Ledge.'"

"Then he has returned before this; the tide is coming in."

Margaret felt a sudden, inexplicable fear. She could not tell why she should feel thus. She turned and went out of the house, and off in the direction of the beach. Perhaps it was habit; she had grown accustomed to think of him as in need of looking after.

Richard Lester had finally come to his senses. He remembered now that he was coming in, and that he must return. Rowing would be easy and delightful. He arose, rubbed his eyes, and made his way down to the boat. But, to his unspeakable astonishment and discomfiture, the boat was gone.

"Gone!" he said to himself, in a faint, confused tone. "What shall I do?"

He looked off shoreward, and fancied he saw his empty skiff bobbing, drifting lightly on the waters that had wooed it. He kept on looking until his eyes were dim. There was no use to cry for help him. And still the water rising about the rocks.

He had not tried to swim since his illness. It was a long distance, and he had never been a very strong swimmer. He still looked landward, but no help came. And still the water rose about the rocks.

He buried his face in his hands.

"A punishment? Regenerated. "A just punishment for my actions?" Then he wished that he could only see Margaret once more, and ask her to forgive him. Perhaps she had cared; perhaps she would be sorry. He would never see her again, or any other living creature. For he could never reach the land. He would wait until the last moment, then attempt to swim it. But he had no force.

It was getting on toward dusk and the water still rose, and would continue to rise until the rocks were covered.

He tried to think; he could; he wished it. Elmer would grieve terribly. By-and-by she would forget. Margaret would never forget you."

He answered, soberly. "I have written much about you to my mother and Miss Hastings."

"Miss Hastings?"

"Yes." For the moment he fairly hated himself; but he was determined to be honest at last. "Miss Elmer Hastings. We are to be married in the autumn."

Then neither spoke. Glancing up into her face presently, he found it passive, a trifle pale, perhaps, lashes. Maybe it was only his fancy; maybe she did not care, after all. He bowed so. Then he rose unsteadily.

"I am going into town to the village," he said.

But Margaret did not offer to accompany him. And so he turned away and left her there, presently.

"I hope she doesn't mind. Poor little girl! How I shall miss her, dear! One thing, I'll never board again with a widow and a young lady daughter. I only hope she won't think me too contrite. I hope she won't think me flirt—and, a few soft speeches, a pressure of the hand at times—wrong, of course."

The tide was out and the skiff clung to the sand. He pushed off shadily into deep water.

He had been out to the shallow a couple of hours, or less, but always with Margaret in the foreground. And to the growing dusk which hid her he murmured:

"Margaret, I love you my life."

She was leaning out as if for the wind and ready to set up her boat.

"I am glad I know," she said.

He went a little; then he spoke again:

"I must go back home," he said in a commanding voice.

"I suppose so," she answered, without sign of emotion.

"I might have known! What am I that he should care for me? Oh, Richard, Richard!"

Meanwhile Richard Lester found it rather pleasant out under the "Ledge." Now, that the "murder was out," he could breathe more easily. He fastened the rope of his boat around a rock, and went up higher. He sat down where the sun had dried away the dampness, and contemplated. He presumed he should be happy as Elmer's husband. Elmer was considered handsome; she was wealthy, refined, accomplished; she dressed in excellent taste and moved in the best society. His mother worshiped her. She, Elmer, was twenty-three years old; six years his junior. Poor little Margaret could not be ever eighteen, he supposed. Poor little brown bird!

Then his thoughts took a wider range. He forgot where he was; he grew utterly oblivious to the fading sunlight or the water rising slowly about the rocks.

The lapping, limpid, lingering water, musical and incessant.

There was no Margaret present to remind him.

"The rocks are covered at high water."

Margaret had been kneeling by her bed for a long, long time—hours, perhaps—when she heard her mother calling.

"Coming, directly," she answered, and went down to the sitting-room. There were no tear-marks on her faces, only a pen pallor.

"Where is Mr. Lester, Margaret?"

"I don't know, mother. Is it near supper-time?"

"Yes; it is getting late. I thought surely you would know where he was."

The words hurt Margaret, innocently as they had been spoken; but she only replied mildly:

"He went away a long while ago. He was going out to the 'Ledge.'"

"Then he has returned before this; the tide is coming in."

Margaret felt a sudden, inexplicable fear. She could not tell why she should feel thus. She turned and went out of the house, and off in the direction of the beach. Perhaps it was habit; she had grown accustomed to think of him as in need of looking after.

Richard Lester had finally come to his senses. He remembered now that he was coming in, and that he must return. Rowing would be easy and delightful. He arose, rubbed his eyes, and made his way down to the boat. But, to his unspeakable astonishment and discomfiture, the boat was gone.

"Gone!" he said to himself, in a faint, confused tone. "What shall I do?"

He looked off shoreward, and fancied he saw his empty skiff bobbing, drifting lightly on the waters that had wooed it. He kept on looking until his eyes were dim. There was no use to cry for help from him. And still the water rising about the rocks.

He had not tried to swim since his illness. It was a long distance, and he had never been a very strong swimmer. He still looked landward, but no help came. And still the water rose about the rocks.

He buried his face in his hands.

"A punishment? Regenerated. "A just punishment for my actions?" Then he wished that he could only see Margaret once more, and ask her to forgive him. Perhaps she had cared; perhaps she would be sorry. He would never see her again, or any other living creature. For he could never reach the land. He would wait until the last moment, then attempt to swim it. But he had no force.

It was getting on toward dusk and the water still rose, and would continue to rise until the rocks were covered.

He tried to think; he could; he wished it. Elmer would grieve terribly. By-and-by she would forget. Margaret would never forget you."

He answered, soberly. "I have written much about you to my mother and Miss Hastings."

"Miss Hastings?"

"Yes." For the moment he fairly hated himself; but he was determined to be honest at last. "Miss Elmer Hastings. We are to be married in the autumn."

Then neither spoke. Glancing up into her face presently, he found it passive, a trifle pale, perhaps, lashes. Maybe it was only his fancy; maybe she did not care, after all. He bowed so. Then he rose unsteadily.

"I am going into town to the village," he said.

But Margaret did not offer to accompany him. And so he turned away and left her there, presently.

"I hope she doesn't mind. Poor little girl! How I shall miss her, dear! One thing, I'll never board again with a widow and a young lady daughter. I only hope she won't think me too contrite. "I am glad I know," she said.

He went a little; then he spoke again:

"I must go back home," he said in a commanding voice.

"I suppose so," she answered, without sign of emotion.

"My mother would have missed me the most," he returned. "Elinor would have cared, I suppose; but she is still young, and young people recover from such things."

"Do they?" asked Margaret, sharply. "I do not think I could, if—if any one I cared for were lost."

She puzzled him now. Perhaps he had been utterly mistaken, perhaps she had a lover whom she loved.

"There is some one, then, that you care for, dear child," he said softly. She started.

"Yes," she said, as if she defied him.

Her answer gave him a vast relief.

"I am so glad," he said, earnestly. "I would like to plan the happiest future for you. I suppose I should be happy myself. My mother is well suited, and Miss Hastings is very amiable."

They were getting close to the landing, and Margaret seemed wholly occupied with the boat.

He rested his oars and spoke with a sudden impulse:

"Tell me, are you very happy in this love of yours?"

"Very happy?" she cried, laughing wildly. "I would not change places with any one on earth!"

"I am so glad," he said once more. "I was afraid—you won't be angry, Margaret? I want to tell you the truth. I think, so much of you, dear child. I was afraid you might think I was trying to—to trifle with you myself. God knows I had no thought of it. You won't be angry, Margaret?"

"No," she said, softly. "I am not angry. I never thought of you as a trifler."

"And we shall always be friends?"

"Always!" The old pathetic ring was in her voice.

They landed then and walked slowly homeward.

At the gate he paused, and with a sudden motion, drew from his finger the diamond that had sparkled there.

"Wear this for my sake?" he cried. "Dear Margaret."

She nodded her head away with a sharp cry:

"No, O not No! that!"

But he, insisting, slipped it on. Then she broke away from him and ran in, up to her own room.

"He does not dream!" she sobbed, flinging herself down as once before that day. "Thank heaven, he does not dream!" And I love him. O, I love him! But he will be happy; that is the most I care. O yes, he will be happy!"

The Festival of "Juggernaut."

The great Car Festival of Juggernath held at Puri, a seaport town a little to the southwest of Calcutta, is an ancient importance is only exceeded by the monster fair of Hurdwar. The annual festival Tithi, where a huge crowd gathers along the coast, and the Republican candidate.

When I was a schoolboy in Southern Ohio, my father was a member of a debating club presented a very different appearance from what it does in our days. Then forsythe and never been divided between Democratic rule and Whig ascendancy. Where Martin, President of the Manufacturers and Tractor Bank, is happily favored in the the corner of which he remained late in the evening to ponder some half formed plan to point to one solitary official act of his administration and pronounce it right. Not one; but all. Not one reputable man had been heard to say that in any one single official act he had made his interests of party or of self superior to the public good, or for one instant forgotten that his office was a sacred and solemn trust to be administered for the best interests of the whole people. In response to this greeting, Gov. Cleveland says he believes

"Fellow-citizens, I can hardly tell the people of Buffalo how I realize to-night, and how grateful I am for this demonstration of the confidence and kindness of my neighbors and fellow-citizens. I have resided among you, and in this city, where all my success in private life has been achieved, for nearly thirty years. To-night I remember it is on you. Is your trust conserved in all that time, and yet within the few weeks that have passed since you last an event has happened or can occur to me of greater importance, that places me within the nation's gaze. The honor it has brought to me I can say fellow-townsmen to share, while I acknowledge with grateful heart all that they in this way have conferred upon me, however much you stood stoutly by my side in every effort of my public life in opposition to the wrongs of party, to which you attribute the public success that has followed upon the unanimity of your counsels and labors, and the earnest activity of your co-operation, you have been forced to the duty of the people of the United States to determine whether they believe a majority they believe in the principles of protection, and to say that the party which can be trusted to uphold and sustain a gentleman to me yesterday in action does not always command prosperity; there are a great many times in the country. Yesterday in it; there has never yet been a time when the party was not defeated by the art of man that was through all times and seasons a supporter of the natural soil as evidence of additional value, he has a right to do it. With these facts before him, no intelligent man will buy a horse imported from France unless he is provided with his pedigree in full in the stud in France, and the importer furnishes you with his bill of sale the French certificate or registration, as this is his only guarantee of safety, a large number of horses of unknown blood being imported to this country and sold as pure bred.

Mason & Hamlin commenced as melodeon makers in 1854. They soon introduced the improved instrument now known as the organ, or American organ, as it is termed in Europe. The new instrument proved so popular that it soon took the place of everything else in this country, being adopted and manufactured by all who had previously made melodeons, and many others were induced to commence the building of these readily growing demand. Now about 80,000 American organs are made each year, and yearly increasing demand. Now about 80,000 always stood at the head, being acknowledged the best. The same makers now have added the Improved Upright Piano-forte, which, they believe, are destined to rank as high as their organs have done.—Boston Traveller.

The Subsoils of Mexico.

The attractions of Tamhaya and San Angel are the fine trees and lovely gardens filled with magnificent trees. With a little care the trees and plants of all climes grow here. The old Spanish houses have windows with iron bars and sashes with glass opening in French fashion on the street, but the large gardens in the rear on one side of them. A few gardens have large iron gates. Those of the Mier, Barron, and Escandon families are handsomely planted. Mier, at the entrance to the "Calle Real," is really monumental. Palms, elms, poplar, and willow, apple and peach trees grow in fraternal neighborhood with the palm, the banana, and the cactus. Endless hills, violets, heliotrope, pansies, honeysuckles, and geraniums flower all the year round. The geranium grows to an immense height if I have seen walls covered with them to the height of twelve and sixteen feet on equables, like apricots and grapes. Their flowers of many varieties and shades, from pure white and light pink to the richest crimson, purple, and blue, and some are variegated with these tints; their shapes vary from the "rose" to the "cimpfleur." Some have the calla lily flourishing abundantly in the shade of the trees, above which the aromatic eucalyptus rears its head far beyond the vines, and then throws out immense branches.

Facts Relating to the Draft Horses of France.

While some people in America call all horses imported from France Normans, it is a fact that there is no breed in France called by that name by the French people; the name Norman, therefore, is purely American. The principal breeds of France are known as Percherons and Boullamis. The Percheron-race are the most highly prized of all French races, and all departments of France go to the Perche for stallions to improve their local breeds. The Percheron Stud Book of France is published under the authority of the French Government, and admits only animals of pure Percheron origin and birth, established by their pedigrees and the pedigrees of their ancestors for generations. The fact that no recorded pedigrees can be furnished with any of the more common breeds of France, explains the eagerness of many importers in insisting that all horses imported from France are alike, and that pedigrees are useless.

It is a well-known fact that what a man gives for a horse over from $500 to $600—the price of a good grade—is paid for quality of blood; and where the seller is not able to give the recorded pedigrees of the animal sold as evidence of additional value, he has no right to do it. With these facts before him, no intelligent man will buy a horse imported from France unless he is provided with his pedigree in full in the stud in France, and the importer furnishes you with his bill of sale the French certificate or registration, as this is his only guarantee of safety, a large number of horses of unknown blood being imported to this country and sold as pure bred.

FEVER and ACUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER,
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and where families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and Scrofulous affections—the King of Blood Purifiers.

Hardened Liver.
Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism. Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I would have been now in my grave. J. W. Morey, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.

Poverty and Suffering.
"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring.

"I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I commenced using Hop Bitters, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it." —A Workingman.

To the Young Women of Michigan.

I desire most earnestly and prayerfully to reach, by my voice or pen, the heart and conscience of every young lady in this state; or every state in this republic.

This is a blessed age in which we live. It is our age and our time to do noble and grand work for "God, and home and native land." It is an opportune time to work for self, and the dear ones to whom our hearts go out in sympathy and love, to those who cluster around the fireside now, and to those who follow after, bearing our names and the impress of our own lives and character.

It is a time when the young men of this country are forming characters for time and eternity. When every man is saying to his brother man "this is the way, walk ye in it," though it be the way of death to body and soul. With the young men so easily influenced for good or evil the young women of to-day must associate or live possibly bear their names and share their fortunes through life, for weal or woe. Then is it not the greatest importance to the young women that they lend their influence and encouragement to temperance and purity to everything that shall enoble and build up character for truth and righteousness? If there is my class of people who should be intensely interested concerning temperance it should be the young women. The hour is full of possibilities for good. Shall we stand idly by and say the battle is not ours? God forbid that we should be so recreant to duty or principle!

So we urge our Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, Put up the motto "For God, and home, and native land," and show your colors for temperance. By so doing you will strengthen others and fortify yourselves in the good work, and encourage and help the young men, also, "to dare to do right." Oh, who can estimate the the influence for good, if our young ladies would only take a decided stand for the right. Dear young friends, will you give the bugle call, now—now for prohibition? Will you organize at once and take up the grand work of the W. C. T. U? Will you arise and say, "As for me and my house, which I have or have to leave, we will labor for the prohibition of the liquor traffic?" And we want you to say to the young men, "Be strong; quit you like men."

Dear young friends, you need the influence, the culture, the recompense that comes from this work to fit you for a higher womanhood, to help you to better understand the responsibilities of this wonderful life, and its relation to the higher life, the home, and the state. Will you step into the work now, while the waters are troubled, and help others to do so, that we as individuals and as a nation may be healed from the drink plague?

As state superintendent of the department of heredity, I have plans of work that I should be glad to have the Unions adopt, especially the young women's union. If each union will appoint a superintendent for this work who will confer with me, I shall be glad to send them.

MRS. DR. MCCREA,
Battle Creek, Mich.

Origin of Names of the Fabrics.

Everything connected with one's business is of importance. Very few dry-goods men know the origin of the name of many of the goods they handle. They may seem trivial points, but they are of interest to the man who seeks to be thoroughly familiar with the merchandise in which he deals. For the information of such we give the derivation of the names of the following goods: Damask is from the city of Damascus; satins from Zaytown in China, callco from Calicut, a town in India, formerly celebrated for its cotton cloth, and worsted calico was also printed. Muslin is named from Mosul in Asia. Alpaca, from an animal of Peru, of the llama species, from whose wool the fabric is woven. Buckram takes its name from Bocarra; fustian comes from Fostat, a city of the middle ages, from which the modern Cairo is descended. Tabby and tabby from a street in Bagdad. Cambric from Cambrai. Gauze has its name from Gaza; laize from Rajacebiuity from Damietta, and jeans from Jean. Drugget is derived from a city in Ireland, Drogheda. Duck comes from Torqite, in Normandy. Blanket is called after Thomas Blanket, a famous clothier connected with the introduction of woolens into England about 1340. Serge derives its name from Xerge, a Spanish name for a peculiar woolen blanket. Diaper is not from D'Ypres, as is sometimes stated, but from the Greek diaspros, figured. Velvet is from the Italian velute, wooly (Latin, vellus—a hide or pelt). Shawl is the Sanscrit sata, floor, for shawls were first used as carpets and tapestry. Bandanna is from an Indian word, meaning to bind or tie, because they are tied in knots before dyeing. Chintz comes from the Hindoo word chint, the latter is the French "of wool."—Trade Journal.

—Scientific engineers say that the bridge over East River is the last long bridge that will ever be erected, and that, had engineers known as much in 1870 as they do now, this bridge would not have been erected. Tunnels are to take the place of bridges.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The Rio Grande Sugar Company Cape May County, N. J., have now 1,000 acres of sorghum under cultivation. They have more than doubled the capacity of their works, and look forward to a very prosperous season. The cane is growing finely, and an excellent crop is anticipated.

A Laboring Man for Congress.

The laborers and mechanics in the ninth district have another opportunity to send to congress a fitting representative, this time in the person of judge S. S. Fallass. They have for years and years maintained that only the rich, and friends of monopolists and gigantic corporations, received the nominations, and hence the poor man has no chance of representation. Happily for all who have to struggle and contend with the adversities of this life, the action of the Ludington convention has placed at our disposal a genuine representative of the working man.

Judge Fallass, our nominee, has been from childhood educated to toil and labor, being brought up on his father's farm in Kent county, Michigan. Plowing, chopping, seeding, reaping and toiling from early morn till late in evening was his hard lot, varied only by short terms at the district or corner school house. When eighteen years of age, he, in common with thousands of other young men, became restive under the monotonous toil of farm life, and started out in the world for himself. He had read Horace Greeley's advice, "take $200, young man, and go west." Not being possessed of such wealth, he could not closely follow the old philosopher's directions, but he could do the next best thing; go without the money, and he did. Possessed of the laudable ambition to make his own way through the world we find young Fallass plodding toward the setting sun. Of the hardships and privations we pass over. He found the far west just as it been pictured by those who had preceded him. Money was be had but by the hardest kind of work and privation. Fallass was not discouraged, and took the first employment he could obtain. There was plenty of work to be had on the railroads then penetrating the great west, and there young Fallass labored. He again grew restive—the toil was laborious, the living rough, the compensation small, and with his hardearned wages in his pocket, he laid down the pick and shovel, and turned his eyes and footsteps toward the dear old state of Michigan.

Closely did he pursue his studies, diligently did he apply every moment to fitting himself for profession, and it is time he entered Michigan's famous free-for-all university. Here he was steady, patient and frugal, and in 1872 honored himself, family and friends by graduating therefrom. His next step was to find a location where he could subsist, at least for the time being, and work industriously for success in the profession he had determined to follow. He looked over northern Michigan, which, twelve years ago was much more of a wilderness than today, and selected Wexford county for a permanent home. He soon made friends, and his quiet, gentlemanly demeanor, his democratic manners, and his straight-forwardness and industrious habits soon bore good fruit. Trust after trust was confided in him, and every one was filled to the letter. A democrat in politics, he was like an onsis in a desert, so strongly republican was and still is Wexford county; but his neighbors and acquaintances thought none the less of him; on the contrary they respected his political opinions, as he did theirs; and when the office of prosecuting attorney was about to become vacant, soon after his arrival, the people elected him thereto by as fine a vote as was ever recorded for young man in a new country. When Clam Lake now Cadillac, had aspirations to become a city, no one person aided more to secure the legislative act than Silas S. Fallass, and very speedily after it was accomplished, Mr. Fallass was made city attorney of Cadillac.

During the "county seat fight," Mr. Fallass was supervisor of his ward, and he did Herculean work during all those troublesome times in setting for over a vexed question common to all new counties. Later he was appointed by governor Jerome to the high office of circuit court judge, and in the fall of 1882, had the proud satisfaction of being elected his own successor by a large majority over the republican candidate Mr. Alexander, his vote in the district being even larger than that cast for governor Begole.

The personal appearance of judge Fallass attracts and commands attention everywhere. He is under forty years of age, of splendid physique, weighs about two hundred pounds, has a clear, honest countenance, is possessed of fine intellectual qualities, and has a character and reputation, both public and private, that is unsullied. No act of his has ever been questioned. He is a man of the people and for the people. As a lawyer he stands the peer of any in his district; as a judge he is known for his fairness and impartiality. In his nomination for the high office he has filled so acceptably, the man and not politics was the over shadowing question with the people, and the bar of his district were as unanimous for his election as the great majority of the voters.

His nomination for congress at Ludington was also as spontaneous and unanimous; the democrats recognized in him the man for the place; the greenbackers the man for the place; the laborers the man for the place. He was the hearty choice of all the anti republican element of the ninth district so fully represented in the joint convention, and as such is before the people for their suffrages.

With judge Fallass in congress, the Herald firmly believes the district will be represented as the opposition has long, but in vain, demanded it should be represented. There will be no class legislation; every act of judge Fallass will be against the few and for the many. There is but one thing for the anti-republicans to do to bring about this grand result. Stand shoulder to shoulder, write for him talk for him, work for him, from now till November 4, then vote for him. We have a majority of the voters in the district with us, the people are with us in the great fight now raging for the people's cause. Let us all, each and every one, do his part toward placing judge S. S. Fallass in the seat now so discreditably held by general Cutcheon in congress.—Big Rapids Herald.

Notes and News.

Fusion with democrats in Michigan is "bastard coalition," but with the republicans in West Virginia and Missouri it is an honorable alliance for a noble purpose. At least that is the verdict of the average republican organ.

A circular has been issued by the commander in chief of the G. A. R., calling attention to the laws of the order on the question of mixing politics with its work. Chap. 5, Art. XI, R. and R. says: "No officer or comrade of the grand army of the republic shall in any manner use the organization for partisan purposes, and no discussion of partisan questions shall be permitted at any of its meetings, nor shall any nomination for political office be made." The circular also suggests that "the wearing of a grand army badge or uniform at a political meeting is in the highest degree improper, and comrades should refrain from so offending against the spirit of our rules and regulations."

The B. & O. Red Book for Michigan is ready for distribution, and in more than one respect, is the most valuable of any of the editions hitherto issued upon this state. As has always been the rule, the forwarding of a stamp to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, is all that is necessary to secure a copy, and in fact the only way, as the Red Book issues are all for mail circulation. The present volume is replete with political statistics and condensed duties, not only as regards the latest presidential, state and congressional elections in this state, but relating as well to elections since admission into the union. It would be difficult to imagine a more complete showing of past results in the state, or a more neatly put together and printed little book.

Gen. Cutcheon has not the "walk-away" this fall that he had two years ago. Judge Fallass is a clean, strong man, and his friends will see that he keeps up with the ticket. The Big Rapids Herald, in mentioning this matter, says: "In Judge Fallass the opposition have a candidate against whose private or official character not a word, true or false, can be uttered. He is a clean man and hence has the hearty and unanimous support of every anti-republican in the district. It is, therefore, fair to presume that he will at least keep up with his ticket. Governor Begole received a majority over Governor Jerome of 266 two years since in this district. From information from all over the ninth, the Herald is sanguine that Judge Fallass will be as strong, if not stronger, than Governor Begole. Taking this view of it, there is but one thing for the opposition to do to secure success—work unceasingly from now till the ballot box closes. Leaves not a stone unturned to elect Fallass over Cutcheon. Talk for him, labor for him—see that every anti-republican does the same. Do not trade, but use every honorable means to secure him votes."

A NEW journal called the Honeymoon, has appeared at Brussels. The editor announces that he has secured the co-operation of a doctor of law and of an experienced gynecologist. The business of this latter functionary will be to find illustrious ancestors for those who think their prospects of marriage will be thereby improved.

THE Mormons claim that there are no paupers among them, but recent statistics show that in the Salt Lake "stake" alone no less than 363 persons "draw support" from the relief societies, and that out of a total population of 23,753. The entire Mormon population, including not only all Utah, but the stakes in Colorado, Idaho, and Arizona, is set down by the latest figures as 158,876.

BRIDGMAN's book on the weather of 1883, the British Medical Journal says: "We often hear a great deal about the dampness of our climate as a cause of disease, of the respiratory organs especially, but as a matter of fact the death rate and the amount of rain fall do not appear to stand in any definite relationship, whereas a spell of cold weather produces an immediate and notable effect."

EX-SENATOR DAVID DAVIS has, since his marriage, exhibited the sprightliness of youth and a jovial sociability that is notable even in the characteristically amiable and happy life of single blessedness which he led for so many years. He greets everybody with a pleasant smile, and talks as enthusiastic ally of the brightness of life as does a boy of 20.

A FRIEND of Lieut. Greely thinks that the Lieutenant is such a firm believer in military discipline that, having been told to stay on Lady Franklin Bay, he will there remain and perish, if relief does not reach him, rather than disobey military orders. The Canadian, Greely will perish at his post. This is a fine, heroic idea to take of Greely's head, but nobody would thank him if he worked his way to Littleton Island.

W. T. SAMPSON, of Greenville County, South Carolina, is blind, but this does not shelter him from accomplishing as much as his neighbors and neighbors who have their sight. He rides on horseback or muleback for long distances, and drives with facility. He drove to Greenville the other day, bought a new buggy, hitched his horse to the new vehicle, gathered the lines, and was soon on the home. Mr. Sitton can feed a gin perfectly, run a circular saw, and transact most of the business for his family.

FIFTY years ago Dr. Dick, of Erie County, Pennsylvania, murdered a man before his own wife. The deceased had learned the lady of Dr. Erasmus, and her child came into the world with a deceased brain, that remained itself most fearfully in after life. As an hereditary line of matters followed, denoting the truth of the sergeant at the Court House door for credit or prediction, including losses of fathers being visited upon children unto the third and fourth generation. This has been literally fulfilled in the Dick family. Recently the last members of this ill fated family died at Erie, after suffering for years from the solitary disagreement of the shocking murder committed half a century ago.

THE Attorney General wears shirts elaborately cuffed in front and at the elbow, standing collar, a black stock, tie, and an old fashioned fob chain, with a heavy gold seal. His white fur beaver hats, made on a low crown of the old bell style, are worn alike winter and summer. He hates clothes, and shoes are made in London. It is said that Mr. Brewster sometimes wears a bit of cloth cutaway coat, but he often appears in a fanciful embroidered velvet jacket, out of the short sleeves of which protrud s his ruffled cuffs. Notwithstanding the fact that his costumes are antique styles, Mr. Brewster could not be called anything but a well dressed man, and the dignified manner in which he walks along Pennsylvania avenue shows that he is aware of the fact that his dress attracts attention.

IT is not generally known that Mrs. Fremont's presence of mind once saved her husband from a humiliating experience, and probably kept California for the United States. After he had started on his most famous Pacific slope expedition, enemies in Washington succeeded in getting a bill through Congress recalling the authority of the expedition. Mrs. Fremont had ordered the dunsonquhin tree, where she could sit upon a rock, and ressuscitate the fallen fortunes of her name, while at the same time she watched her little brother Joshua to see that he got into no mischief.

Patty was 8 years old, and a thrifty little maiden. She had pieced two bedquilts already, and had made a shirt for her father. She had learned to spin wool, too, though she was too tall enough for it, and they had had to lay a thick plank on the floor beside the wheel, for her to walk upon, while she carried the threads.

But little Joshua was not yet four, and all the work he had to do was to tumble home-made bread as well as he could. But that kept him busy all the time.

"Joe, just take him out in the yard, Patty," her mother had said that morning. "With all the baking I have to do to-day, and my mind so worried at the same time, I can't have Joshua under my feet building cob houses."

So Joshua lay on his back out of doors, twisting grasses round his fat, bare toes, while Patty talked to him.

"I know what mother's worried about," she said; "it isn't whether the sweet bake good. It's about the British. I lay awake in the middle bed last night, and heard father talking about it."

"The British can't come here; Cousin Stephen would tell 'em," said little Joshua, with perfect faith in his cousin of 9, and in the cousin's ability to run at the fees.

"Father would tell 'em, too," said Patty, loyally; "but an army, Lady-bird, only Tories."

"Guess I'll hide in the cave if they do come," suggested Joshua. "Where'll you hide, Patty?"

"I'll boil all the doors and go do a-roll," she said, with a long sigh. And she showed she had talked it o'er. "You know some of the prizes true, the prize for bees, and the prize for cheese, and the prize for butter, and the prize for cloth, and all that there on the one floor and out?

"Well, I'll boil them all, and put 'em in the cave, and then the British can't get 'em. Or I'll put 'em in Uncle Silas's."

Great numbers of women and children were depending for their safety on what they could; some thought the Tories would be more merciful to a woman than to a man. Others had hidden their valuables in the well, or in the ground, and had buried their provisions in the woods.

Patty had not quite the courage of her self-confidence that she showed. She had talked it over with Joshua, and had made up her mind that if the British came she would run to Uncle Silas's house, which was on a hill about a mile away, and there she would climb a tree and hide in the branches.

Joshua, who had no fears, was delighted, and then, for fear the British might be run down the path after him, he would climb the tree with her.

Meanwhile the mother in the kitchen cleared the hot coals and ashes out of the oven, and put her brown bread and her pies in it, and then went to bed, to bake. She was expecting Cousin Lucky and her daughter to spend the day with her, and to help her with her work, but had left the settlement.

So back the wood, women and children drove, to their own homes, and to their desolated homes. Patty's heart beat wildly as the cause to the town was known, but she said nothing to Joshua.

No joy of peace it was, standing safe in its place by the brook as I the town went on fire, which its doers open, as they had left them.

But intruders had been there, either soldiers or foraes, for the table was stripped of food, and in the fireplace all the coals had been speared and the barrels of molasses broken open and spilled.

But the father was spared to his wife and children, and home was home still, though it was a heap of ashes. Patty's little cousin of their townspeople standing, looking back with eyes of grief and despair.

"The town is burning! the town is burning!" they wailed.

Also, Hempstead and her children dragged themselves wearily up the hill, where they too could look back and see the smoke and flames of the conflagration.

It was not the loss of their homes alone that made those women's faces wild and wan, their husbands and sons were back there fighting, and they might never see them alive again.

Well, the war was long, so it had to push on. They had been fleeing even since before sunrise; now the afternoon was gone, and the trees and land faded. The little children cried, and hung to their mothers' gowns. They stood too dazed.

From all the first farmhouses they had passed in their flight the women had come out and joined them. But now they had left behind them all that [illegible] comparatively safe for that night at least, and at the last farm they had found a party of them afraid for shelter.

The family within received them with the open arms of the backwoods, and [illegible] for them, and did what they could to comfort them.

Mrs. Hempstead and Patty lay down, close to their mother's side, and were soon asleep.

The [illegible] was quiet, and before long the cuggies came out on the road to recruit the fugitives.

The farmer's wife, who was burnt, they said, but not all; the forts had been taken, many men had been massacred, and the women compelled to do their work, but [illegible] settlement.

So back the wood, women and children drove, to their own homes, and to their desolated homes. Patty's heart beat wildly as the came to the town. Was home, her dear old home, also a ruin?

For Representative, Charles S. Hampton.

The democratic and greenback convention to nominate a candidate for representative in the legislature for the Emmet district, convened at Petoskey on Tuesday afternoon, the former at the parlors of the Cushman house, the latter at the Occidental.

After preliminary work, the parties met in joint convention under the two thirds rule. An informal ballot was taken, showing 12 votes for A. D. Cruickshank of Charlevoix, 13 for C. S. Hampton of Harbor Springs, and 11 for D. Calkins of Petoskey. An other informal ballot was taken, with but slight change, when the convention proceeded to a formal ballot, as follows:

Necessary to choice	24
A. D. Cruickshank	17
C. S. Hampton	19

The balloting proceeded with but slight variation for fifteen ballots.

The convention then adjourned for supper.

After supper the 16th ballot stood:

Necessary to choice	24
A. D. Cruickshank	16
C. S. Hampton	20

Mr. Cruickshank's name was then withdrawn, and the nomination of Mr. Hampton made unanimous.

Mr. Hampton is a young man of energy and ambition, and as a politician, as well as publisher of the Independent, has made for himself an enviable record. His executive ability is unexcelled, and as a worker upon the issues he makes himself clear understood. Even in his contests he is open and honest in his methods, and his representative in the legislature will become fast untiring champion in the legislative halls at Lansing. His residence of eight years in the district has made him a host of friends who are determined to see him elected to the first and only office ever accepted by him at the hands of the people.

Mr. Cruickshank withdrew from the contest with honors to himself. He held steadily the solid delegations of both parties from his own county and four of the democratic delegates from Emmet after the complimentary vote to Dr. Calkins. He held these delegates until he withdrew his name, because they believed him the best man for the place and the most likely to insure success to the ticket, and when he wants or will accept a similar office they will be just as ready to stand by him to the end.

Charlevoix is entitled to the representative, but as the choice must now come from Emmet, we submit gracefully, and shall undertake to overcome with the workingmen's candidate the large republican majority of two years ago, which added to the fusion majority of Emmet and Charlevoix will elect Mr. Hampton handsomely.

Fraud in the Auditor General's Office.

Gov. W. Stone, who was a few weeks ago summarily removed from a clerkship in the Auditor General's office, has given to the public a statement in which he charges that Wm. C. Stevens "in his official capacity as auditor-general violated a law of the state and had for his own benefit perpetrated a fraud upon every person doing business at his office. On the first day of October, 1883, the law provided that certain state tax lands should become purchasable, at one quarter of the tax originally assessed, the first applicant to have the first choice of purchase. These sales excited great interest among land dealers; people came or sent agents from all parts of the state to make purchases. It is a fact well known, and was widely commented upon at the time, that many of these parties sat up all night in order to secure the much coveted privilege of making the first application. A line was formed and the moment the door was opened there was an exciting race among the applicants to be the first at the desk. It is also a well known fact, which can be attested by scores and hundreds of people, that William K. Pradden, of this city was the lucky and agile gentleman who first reached the purchasing desk and made the first lawful application. But letter register "O," of 1883, page 310, which records the applications of that day are as follows:

Application No. 26,027	W. C. Stevens
Application No. 26,28	W. C. Stevens
Application No. 26,29	W. C. Stevens
Application No. 26,30	Charles H. Palmer
Application No. 26,31	William K. Pradden
Application No. 26,32	George W. Freeman

Now I charge that auditor-general W. C. Stevens, by clandestinely putting in these four applications in advance of Mr. Pradden, who was the first lawful applicant, perpetrated a fraud upon every party doing business at his office; and I further charge that in perpetrating this fraud in his own interest he violated one of the plainest provisions of the statute, which expressly prohibits "an officer or clerk employed in the state land office or in the office of the auditor general of this state, during the term of his service or within three months after the discontinuance of such service, from purchasing, either directly or indirectly from the state, at either of said offices, any lands for sale at said office or either of them." That this law was well understood in the auditor's office is shown by the fact that the deputy auditor general on the prescribing day publicly notified the clerks that they would not be permitted to make applications for the purchase of these lands. It is too clear for argument that the fraud and violation of law charged by me upon auditor general Stevens is a fact beyond denial. And I challenge explanation or refutation of my statement. The laws of the state, and the records of his own office, prove my charge. And I leave it with auditor-general Stevens to explain, if he dare, how the application of Charles H. Palmer, in addition to his own, happened to be given preference over that of Mr. Pradden. I make no comment. I leave the case with the public."

A reporter of the Detroit Free Press interviewed the auditor general on the truth of this matter, and that gentleman admitted that the records made such showings, but claimed ignorance of their existence until Stone's statment was made public. The Free Press however, has proof that the auditor-general, his deputy, book-keeper, and at least one clerk knew of the irregularity at the time; and the clerk who detected the fraudulent transaction of the three principals has been retained in the office to keep him silent.

Let the books be opened. Reinvate the office and let the people know how many other irregularities are covered by bribes and defective memories.

The people demand a change.

A Hungry Python's Breakfast.

"This is the fellow who gobbled up the kitten," said Mr. Burns, of No. 115 Roosevelt street, as he pulled a box into the middle of the store and carefully lifted the lid. A large python lay contentedly coiled up in the bottom and lazily lifted his head and blinked at the observers, while a number of monkeys who had spied his snakeship from a couple of cages began jumping wildly from side to side and set up an unearthly screeching, in which some three hundred parrots and cockatoos heartily joined. A black cat that had cautiously crept up and sniffed the box humped her back, thickened her tail, and spit.

"That's the mother of the kitten that the snake ate," added Mr. Burns. The python was a splendid specimen of his kind. He was over twenty feet in length and ten inches thick. The kitten must have been pretty well digested, for there was no abnormal bunch in the snake's body to indicate where it lay. Mr. Burns received this and two other African pythons two days ago, and neglected to nail down the lid of the box that held the East India snake. In the morning, after the arrival of the snakes, when he entered the store he noticed the old black cat walking about as if in search of something and mewing pitifully. He suspected that something was wrong, and soon after discovered that the python had made his escape from the box. He found him at last coiled up in an empty barrel in the rear of the store. He was in a bad humor, and made a dash at Mr. Burns, but the latter was too quick for the reptile, and seized it by the neck. "The fellow then tried to coil himself around me and give me a squeeze," he said, "but I know how to handle these animals, and didn't give him a chance. I put him into his box and shut down the lid. He is quiet enough now, and will remain so until he gets hungry again."

The other two pythons are smaller and their bodies are of a darker color. Mr. Burns gently shook one box and the snake raised his head, darted out his forked tongue, made two or three crooks in his neck, and gazed steadily at the reporter. "He's going to make a grab at you," said Mr. Burns, and slammed down the lid. "I know when these fellows mean mischief. Do they bite hard? Well, they can draw considerable blood, and their bite smarts. I've been bitten several times and have had two or three tight squeezes, but I grab them around the throat and then I know just how they intend to coil. They can't fool me now any more."—New York Times.

Boston Slang.

"Dear, dear, where have you been girls," said a Boston mother to her daughters, who returned late from an entertainment. "We've been carmining the municipality," piggled the eldest. "And observing the pachyderm," laughed the second. "And wondering the female to an extraordinary elevation," chimed in the third. "Dear, dear, dear!" exclaimed the mother in expostulatory tones. "There's no harm done, mamma," pouted the fourth; "everything is amiable, and the fowl, whose cackling was the salvation of Rome, is suspended at an altitude hitherto unknown in our experience." § Explanatory Chart—"Painting the town red." Gov. Cleveland was assaulted the other day by the friend of a man he had refused to pardon from prison. The governor defended himself, and Mr. Ingalls is successful in his own business, while his opponent was not altogether, and retired. And in the business of the people, as an officer of the law, Mr. Ingalls' record will certainly compare favorably with that of his opponent.

Mr. Cruickshank withdrew from the contest with honors to himself. THE GAME OF LIFE.

AN ODE TO FORTUNE.

The life I lead is a game of cards,
With fortune the dealer, and fate the stakes;
Each player receives a hand of trumps,
And each a trump-card to play.

Some have a high card to the last,
And others a losing card;
Some hold a mixed packet of trumps,
With neither nine nor ace.

Some hands are received hard,
Me and my fellows unfortunately,
Justly must know, when the card is dealt,
My hand to be Poker at.

Thus hand on hand the days of mortals
While some are short, and others long,
And here or there we gather
Whatever most of these.

When I play my game, then on and the same,
The stakes are small and brassy,
Sometimes I win, sometimes I lose,
But mainly play for fancy.

Some play for money, some for fun,
And so for each their hand;
But sorry all the more I play
Can I to count my losses.

When I score up fancy counters at last,
And play out the hand,
Then I will show my cards to you
In order as I stand.

My fancy counters are numerous,
Of every sort and kind,
And will be the last on board the Ferryman, I hope, when he demands.

Adieu, Fortune, then! Thou'st been a jade,
And played me with the cards;
But I'll not blame you, whatever you do,
In order as I stand.

CHAPTER I.

"Well, I'm glad you've come, Dick, for I've got a wounded man with her insensible at the door, and Dan Hilton to Capt. Parker's; so I have still a leg of it, and you can have the other."

"Oh, we'll bother Parker, the old Captain's only child, whose brilliant wooing I have been watching so far, and Dan's friend Hilton, as I suppose he's the wounded man. Why, you're a regular old matchmaker, Mrs. Atherton, and I'll be bound you've got some plot on foot to bring them together."

"Now, indeed," returned Harris, sprightly. "And because itself in full of curiosities to one who has never been there before."

"I have never been in this part before," answered Mr. Harrington. "This is the best acreage I have made—a ship canvasser, you know."

"And will be the last on board the Tennessee, I hope," then in thematic, Adams. "Come, let's get the ladies aboard; and then, with a high concealed under our fans, be turned and went to bow."

Those the Indians have temples very near to the outskirts of Madras," said Mr. Atherton, a pretty young married lady who was one of the party. "How I should like to see one!"

"And you might see something and did not like, such as a bon encounter or a bore," added Dr. Craigland.

"Oh, there's no danger," said the Captain. "Bernie has always been welcome to come and see one of them, and I have shoot a round to gratify her; so let us come, and get up a party and escort."

"How should I know that you'd be?" said Mrs. Atherton. "And forget to make me Captain!"

Just then the ice was a-land reported, at which everybody rushed on the deck. Mr. Harrington sprang clear of the deck and to the the immediately wrote.

"Where is the wounded man, Harris?" you look, and was answered," said Mr. Atherton, with a covert sneer, as she saw the gentleman a little disturbed at a remark he had made to her. "Where is the wounded man, Harris?"

"At the gangway," returned Harris, carelessly. "And here comes Dr. Craigland to see to him."

"I wouldn't own it," laugh of the surgeon, as he came up and shook hands with the party. "I'm only a doctor by courtesy, and Capt. Parker's daughter has been so well attended to by Dr. Craigland that I hardly like to own that I am a doctor."

"Why, you're a regular humbug," said Mrs. Atherton, laughing. "I've been telling Mr. Harrington that I've

LAST RALLY.

Chas. S. Hampton, fusion candidate for representative in the state legislature, will address the people at Charlevoix on Friday evening, October 31st. Everybody turn out and give Mr. Hampton an enthusiastic reception.

Democratic Representative Committee.

At the convention in Petoskey Oct. 21, the following district committee was appointed:

Charlevoix—J. Milo Eaton, chairman.
Emmet—C. J. Pailthorp.
Cheboygan—W. F. DePuy.

The committee were instructed by the convention to base the representation on the population of counties.

A Folded Ballot.

Every elector is entitled by law to vote a folded ballot. No supervisor or inspector of election is authorized to unfold a ballot and examine it to see "if it is straight." On the contrary the law expressly prohibits him from doing so, in the following language, sec. 164 of the statutes of Michigan:

"When a ballot shall be received one of the inspectors, without opening the same, or permitting it to be opened, shall deposit such ballot in the box."

Any elector whose ballot is thus opened should not only consider himself insulted, but should make formal complaint against the offending official for violation of the law.

For State Senator George Parmelee.

This gentleman we have never met, and know little of except that he is a prosperous farmer and fruit grower of Old Mission, a conscientious, faithful greenbacker and an uncompromising foe to republican misrule. This is record enough to commend him to the consideration of honest progressive voters. He is an old resident of the district, and has many friends who will see that the republican majority of two years ago is very much reduced if not entirely overcome. If elected, he will represent one of the chief industries of the district, on which depends the actual permanent development of this region. He is in fact the workingman's candidate.

Another Dodge.

A ticket is being circulated to trap unwary voters, ostensibly to boom the Butler electoral ticket, but directly help Blaine. In addition to the regularly nominated seven greenback electors the names of six other greenbackers are given, and a state ticket made up from the republican and fusion tickets. Look out for them. Do not be deceived by thinking you are helping Butler's cause. Every vote cast for the extra greenback electors is a half vote for Blaine. We warn every elector to know positively what he is voting before putting the ballot in the box. Again we say, do not be deceived by the headings, but read your ticket, and see that the names are the same as published in this paper. Look out for bogus tickets.

Effect of Free Trade.

Examples in history confirm the teachings of political economy.

Venice, Holland, England, Spain and the United States are striking examples. These all attained their greatest or most rapid development by means of free trade.

Blaiquiri says: "We could wish no other argument in favor of free trade than the prodigious development of Venetian industries during the long reign of that freedom. The decline began with protection."

Holland during its free trade period was the general store house of all products of all industry, and their ships the carriers of the ocean.

Spain rose under free trade to be a dominating power in the world, but degenerated to a nation of beggars under protection.

England protected for centuries was reduced to beggary. Enjoying free trade for forty years she has become the greatest nation of Europe. Wages have increased sixty per cent. and are higher than anywhere in protected Europe. Want, pauperism, and crime have decreased one half, she furnishes and does the carrying trade of the world.

From 1850 to 1869, under free trade, the United States enjoyed its greatest prosperity. In the leading lines of wealth, in population, foreign commerce, railroads, in capital, wages and products, in manufactures, in value of farms, its progress was greater than it ever has been since under protection.

Against these solid and stubborn facts the heathen of protection may rage in vain.

A Successful Failure.

A republican meeting was appointed for Barnard school house Monday evening, Oct. 27. Mr. H. L. Corbet, republican candidate for prosecuting attorney, was the speaker. A union meeting was also billed, Prof. Hansley appeared for the union; the result was a joint debate. Mr. Corbet opening, Prof. Hansley following, and Mr. Corbet closing. The best of feeling prevailed and the general verdict was that the professor had the best of the argument, and supported it with reliable proofs. Three cheers were given for the union ticket with a will. Three cheers were offered for Blaine & Logan, but only one was given by one man and a boy. Mr. Corbet looked crest-fallen—and Charlevoix county is safe for the union.

Every voter should know that his name is registered Saturday.

Local Temperance Work.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Officers of the Society.

President—Mrs. C. V. Cook.
First Vice President—Mrs. L. E. Allen.
Second Vice President—Mrs. J. T. Jiddings.
Third Vice President—Mrs. C. F. Van Aiken.
Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. D. C. Loveday.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. R. Sidfield.
Treasurer—Mrs. C. J. Strang.

A Temperance Argument.

Viewed from merely an economic standpoint, the consumption of intoxicating liquors is a national evil of such gigantic proportions as few people fully realize. Without considering the mental and moral effects of whiskey-drinking, the loss of health and character engendered by the debasing habit, its great drain upon the resources of the country and the capacity of the people for advancing their material interests is sufficient to procure the speedy indictment of the traffic as a public robber. Some interesting statistics recently gathered show the amounts expended annually by the people of this country for some staple articles of use to be as follows:

Bread	$500,000,000
Meat	300,000,000
Iron and steel	200,000,000
Woolen goods	257,000,000
Sawed lumber	220,000,000
Cotton goods	210,000,000
Boots and shoes	190,000,000
Sugar and molasses	155,000,000
Public instruction	85,000,000
Missions	5,000,000

During the same period this country paid for intoxicating liquors the enormous sum of $900,000,000. There is abundant food for reflection. The two important items of bread and meat cost us annually $700,000,000 less than our liquors. Our bill for iron and steel goods, woolen goods, cotton goods, boots and shoes does not equal our whiskey bill, while the insignificant amounts expended for public instruction and for the work of missions would just about pay the interest on whiskey bill if we should let it stand for a year. These figures are not fanciful. They are gathered from reliable statistics, and as temperance argument they are business-like, and they are absolutely unanswerable.—Farmer's Union.

Notes and News.

"Anti fusion" is a fine mixture.

Read your ticket before voting.

Roscoe Conkling is out for Cleveland.

Wilbur F. Storey, of the Chicago Times died last Monday night.

The Cheboygan Democrat gets $175 for doing the same official county printing done in this county for $60. How do these figures strike our people?

The "straight greenback" ticket mentioned in another column was "nominated" at Lansing by a half dozen hollering, sarcbead greenbackers. Beware. Don't meddle with them.

Every laborer, every mechanic, every voter who desires to cast his ballot for honest government, should fall into line and support heartily the people's candidate for congress, judge S. S. Fallass.

David Preston, prohibition candidate for governor, does not and has not owned a building in East Tawas to be used as a saloon. The story is a falsehood originating with the Detroit organ in Detroit.

The best business men of New York joined in a Cleveland demonstration last week, which eclipsed everything of the kind ever attempted. Over 25,000 men were in line, and 200,000 torch lights were on the streets.

Cadillac Times: Judge Fallass made a ringing speech at Big Rapids on Saturday night, and made many votes thereby. The judge is getting to the front rapidly, and surprises seem to have not heard him speak before.

Frank A. Dean of Charlotte, in a political speech last Monday night, likened the infant (?) industries of this country to a full grown, healthy man "straight down the house" in carrying the audience what they would think of it as looser if he should go to his aged mother and in a pleading tone of voice ask her to nurse him for a little while.

Chas. S. Hampton, of Harbor Springs, editor, orator, and general good fellow has been nominated for the legislature by the fusionists in his district. Charles is a standard bearer in the army of bold Ben Butler, and has a head full of well assorted brains, copper fastened lungs, and a voice that may be heard afar off.—Evening News.

The reports which come to us from the ninth congressional district of this state are most encouraging for the union candidate, judge S. S. Fallass, of Wexford. Most of the counties in the district have heretofore been strongly republican, but the indications point to a considerable breaking up of the majorities there. Muskegon, Manistee, and Newaygo promise to better their record of even two years ago, when great things were done in these counties for the cause of good government. Judge Fallass is a man whose life and record richly commend him to the people of his district as one in every way worthy of their trust. He is an earnest, honest, strong man; and it can be said of him that, if elected to congress, as we think he will be, he will not mutilate in the congressional record the speech which he made on the floor of the house. As much cannot be said of his opponent.—Free Press.

Charles S. Hampton—born on farm in Leanwee county in 1856—his father was one of the earliest leaders of the republican party—got washed on Charles Sumner and named his son after him—in 1858 went to northwest Texas with his parents who engaged in raising stock—the old man was too much of a union man, and in 1862 had to "light out" for the north—family followed soon after, and Charles' first recollections are of these stirring times—lived at Hudson during the war and at Muir after—entered Adrian college at 15 years of age—graduated at 18—started out as a pedagogue—principal of Petoskey and Harbor Springs schools—in 1878 started the Harbor Springs Independent, and has published it ever since, triumphing over all difficulties—born a fighter and leader—was captain when he played soldier, captain of base ball clubs, leader in all games and sports—now wants to run the political machine, and is a fusion candidate for the legislature—secretary of the west Michigan press association—president of the state press association—secretary of his county agricultural society—president of the county teachers' association—fills all official positions with credit to himself and satisfaction to others—five feet eight inches tall—weighs 140 pounds—dark complexion, dark hair, mustache and eyes—struck by lightning when 14 years old and has been full of electricity ever since—brilliant campaign speaker—full of vim—and has a firm belief that Ben Butler is the biggest man on earth—has Ben's picture in his bedroom and says his prayers before it when at home—whistles on when not at home.—Evening News.

JUDGE FALLASS' LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

CADILLAC, MICH., SEPT. 25, '84.

HON. HIRAM J. HOYT, CHAIRMAN of the Congressional Democratic Committee, Manistee, Mich.:

DEAR SIR—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter apprising me of the action of the People's Joint Convention at Ludington in placing me in nomination as candidate for Congress from this district, and to say in reply that I would at any earliest leisure forward you a further reply. Since that time I have examined with care the platform of principles adopted by the Convention, and find that taken together they express the views of a sound and conservative class of government policy which should command the unanimous approval of all the citizens who are in favor of an administration of the affairs of the government with an eye single to the blessing and appreciation of the people, shall know no party or class but only the whole people.

It is not my purpose, nor is it necessary at this time, to enter into any extended comment in regard to the platform. It is clear and explicit, speaking in no uncertain tones, so that any extended comment is uncalled for. But it is a matter of congratulation that it does not, by linking through the selection of party, pledge the candidate to any line of policy or class but only to the principles declared in the platform, and that the candidate is free to act in the interest of

BEECHER VS. BLAINE.

A Caustic Letter from Henry Ward Beecher to Candidate Alger, of Michigan.

James F. Joy's Opinion in 1877 of the Plumed Pirate of the Kennebec.

A Partially Obliterated Tattoo Renewed with Artistic Skill and Vigor.

[New York telegram.]

On Sept. 21 the New York Herald, in its correspondence from Detroit, attributed to Henry Ward Beecher a statement to the effect that James F. Joy, who placed Mr. Blaine in nomination in 1876, had said to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Blaine, while Speaker of the House of Representatives, had offered to appoint a House Railroad Committee which should comprise certain members suitable to Mr. Joy—such, in fact, as he should request or dictate—providing that Mr. Joy should take off Mr. Blaine's hands $3,000 worth of Little Rock Railroad bonds. This story remained uncontradicted until Sept. 30, when Mr. H. A. Alger, of Detroit, called to Mr. Joy, in London, the story as coming from Mr. Beecher, with the request to answer whether or not it was true. To this Mr. Joy replied, on the same date, as follows: "Blaine never made me any offer to appoint a committee to suit me in any manner or form, or for any consideration of any kind whatever. Neither directly nor indirectly did I ever say anything to Beecher which would justify any such statement as that." To which denial of the story of Mr. Blaine's corrupt offer The letter will contain specifically and in detail Mr. Beecher's account of what Mr. Joy did put him about Mr. Blaine's proposal to him, the same coming from the mouth of the principal and this Mr. Beecher will defy Mr. Joy or any one else to contradict. Mr. Beecher's letter will govern further. It is for will say in so many words that his knowledge of the matter inside a desire of Mr. Blaine to occupy a high position of trust is not of recent date, but that he has known it for more than twelve years. The appearance of the letter is another link with the general interest in this city by all who are aware of its existence. The following is the text of the statement by Mr. Beecher as given by the Detroit Tribune correspondent. It was, he said, while he was a guest in Mr. Joy's house in London that Mr. Blaine's name came up incidentally. There were several gentlemen present. Mr. Joy thereupon said that he knew Mr. Blaine to be a corrupt man, and went on to give his reasons. As well as Mr. Beecher remembered them, they were as follows: He, Mr. Joy, was in Washington in behalf of a Southern railroad in which he was largely interested, and which was threatened with hostile legislation by Congress. Mr. Blaine being Speaker of the House. A committee was to be appointed having supervision of the line to that end. Mr. Joy asked Mr. Blaine, in the appointment of the committee to put on it a certain member. Mr. Blaine gave no answer at the time, but the next day an entirely acceptable list was handed to Mr. Joy by the Speaker. Mr. Joy read it and found the man he wanted was not on it. Mr. Beecher does not remember the name of that member. He said that if Mr. Joy would take them off the list he would make up the committee as Mr. Joy wished. It was so done, and the committee was made up, at least to the extent of not containing the two direct suspicion. Mr. Joy said he declined the bargain. This was Mr. Beecher's version of Mr. Joy's statement. It will be observed that in a general detail it is practically the statement made in the Detroit address. Mr. Beecher added that he used the facts in a public address, and that some days after he received a message from Mr. Blaine begging him to call on him. Mr. Blaine at the time was very ill. He did so, and Mr. Blaine assured him his mother-in-law had given him the facts. Mr. Beecher's statement was then repeated by, and Mr. Blaine said: "Mr. Beecher, see how we have treated Joy. We have let Joy keep quiet." Mr. Beecher replied with some heat that Mr. Blaine if he meant to be President, must not act thus, but entered a fine hand in quoting Mr. Joy's statement. "Oh, no," said Mr. Blaine, "not My dear must have been mistaken." Mr. Blaine did not make an further point as to what the general statement, and Mr. Beecher said to your correspondent that the public was reminded him of Mr. Blaine's similar testimony in regard to Mulligan.

THE LETTER.

Following is the text of Mr. Beecher's letter:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 6.—To Gen. H. A. Alger, Candidate for the governorship of the State of Michigan—Dear Sir: The publication of your telegram to Mr. James F. Joy, of Detroit, but now in London, and his reply, compels me to publish the facts of an interview with him at his house on or about Sept. 23, 1877, in order to clear myself of the charge of having libelled me personally and of having slandered the character of Mr. Blaine's candidacy for the Presidency. In giving to the public possession of the story of that interview as the responsible head of a private household as the interview of a friend with a guest of a public man I had a right to suppose it private in any common sense of that word. But a partial and imperfect story of that interview on the part of Mr. Joy myself has not known, or I should not have published it. Should it appear that Mr. Joy's statement is substantially true, I shall feel bound to publish the whole story, which I have hitherto refrained from doing, because I was unwilling to expose Mr. Joy's conduct to the public. Should Mr. Joy's statement contradict mine, I shall feel bound to publish the whole story, because I have hitherto refrained from doing, because I was unwilling to expose Mr. Blaine

ORIGIN OF NIAGARA.

How the Great Cataract and Gorge Were Formed.

A reporter of the Courier who was at Niagara falls yesterday was more than ever impressed with the grandeur of Niagara's chasm. He saw long black lines marking off the various formations of the mighty abutments, and could not help wondering the enormous length of time the watering forces of nature had required to dig out that solid rock and make the dizzy gorge.

The desire to obtain accurate information on the subject directed his steps later to the office of Dr. Julius Pohlman, in the Lewis block. Dr. Pohlman is one of the most prominent geologists of these parts.

"With great pleasure I will tell you anything I know about Niagara," said he. "In tracing the origin of this river about whose banks cling such recollections of mystery and tragedy, we must go away back into the pre-glacial times when the bed of the great lakes was occupied by a river and Tonawanda valley contained a lake fifty miles in length and from ten to twenty miles in width, with a possible maximum depth of sixty feet. The northern barrier of the lake was of limestone formation. Being about fifty feet lower than the southern one, the overflow of water was toward the Ontario valley. The outlet found its way into the present channel of Niagara river somewhere near the upper rapids of the river above the falls.

"From here the waters met no obstacle, and in their flow predetermined the river gorge between the falls and the whirlpool, and continued in a straight course north, through the side of the whirlpool, and thence through the valley of St. David's in Canada and onward through the Ontario valley. I have made careful searches, and find this track of the river from the whirlpool through Canada. By and by the Tonawanda lake began to subside, and finally was reduced to a river with a wide, low valley on each side. The course of the river in making its way out of the valley of the ancient lake changed. It flowed into the channel of the present Niagara where the present Tonawanda river enters now. It curved around the southern margin of Grand Island, which formed a shallow part of the northern margin of the lake, and had arisen as a point, in the course of time, and then flowed north into the original channel of the outlet, thus determining the two branches of the present river. The branch of the Niagara which separates the island from the main land is of quite modern origin, as testified to by soundings. Well, the erosion across the thin bed of Niagara limestone naturally cut one or the other parts of the outlet deeper than the rest, and confining the smaller channels gave birth to a number of larger and smaller islands, known at present as Goat, Bath, Luna, the Sisters, and so forth.

"The branches of the river joined again into one stream as they approached the heavy Niagara limestone at about the site of the new suspension, or foot bridge, and rushed north for about three-quarters of a mile, where they fell over a precipice of about one hundred feet. Goat island extended northerly in a triangular prolongation with its apex somewhere abreast of the northern end of the present American fall. Below this fall of one hundred feet that I have just spoken of the river descended in rapids over the shale until it encountered the Clinton limestone near the railway suspension bridge, where it took another leap. From here a short rapid carried it to the entrance of the whirlpool, where another fall was caused by quartzose sandstone of the Medina group. Thence there was a rapid current to Ontario basin. The volume of water then was exceedingly small as compared with the estimated twenty million cubic feet of the present. Now, at the time of the glacial period the movement of the ice sheet was in a northeasterly direction. The channel of the great river which I remarked about in the beginning was excavated deeply and the valley of the great lakes was formed. When the Arctic climate again changed into a temperate one, the ice sheet retreated northward and in its melting spread over the land all the ground-up material as well as the rocks which had been caught up and carried under, and the valleys of St. David's, Tonawanda, and others were more or less completely filled up with drift. The channel of the old Tonawanda river from the whirlpool was also included in the filling process. After long ages the ice disappeared and the bed it had occupied became the seat of the chain of great lakes. At this time the area Erie and Ontario formed two large bodies of water and were at the same level—that is, their surfaces were even with Lewiston heights. The waters in the lakes began to subside and a mud flat appeared between them, extending from Buffalo to Lewiston. An outlet from Lake Erie was formed through this flat, and we have the present Niagara river."

"I have always been taught that Niagara Falls were originally at Lewiston, and were their way back," said the reporter.

"That is the popular theory, but it is erroneous. In that case we must suppose that Lake Ontario was lower primarily than Lake Erie. It was not. I have found traces of the beach which its surface touched up on the mountain side. Both lakes subsided together, and Niagara river wore out its present channel in flowing from one lake to another. Of course you understand it has required ages, thousands of years, to accomplish this work."

"Why didn't the river follow the old channel and empty through St. David's valley?"

"Because the valley was drift-filled, and there was a shallow valley from the whirlpool to Lewiston. The erosion was very rapid. It was the line of the least resistance. Hence the bend of the river at right angles at the whirlpool is accounted for. As the excavation of the lower gorge was progressing the falls of the pre-glacial river came again into action. The two lower falls became rapids and the upper fall began to recede in horseshoe form. The retrocession brought it to the apex of Goat island, opposite Prospect park, when the cataract divided and formed the American and Horseshoe falls. The northern margin of Goat island was quickly undermined and destroyed by the combined action of the waters, and was compelled to recede with the Canadian fall."

"Have the falls retreated recently, and if so, how far?"

"We have few measurements, and it is a great pity. By comparing a survey made by Prof. Hall in 1847 with one in 1875, we find that the Horseshoe fall has retreated one hundred feet in thirty-four years."—Buffalo Courier.

Scientific Miscellany.

Recent discussions by English authorities show that doctors are far from agreement concerning the distance to which small-pox germs may be conveyed by the air. Dr. Bingham has supposed that infection could not be given at a greater distance than two or three feet in out-door air; Dr. Hill has pinned the limit at five or six feet; Dr. Tatham, at six to eight feet; and Dr. Grieve at eight to ten feet. Others have given fifteen, thirty, fifty, seventy, 100, 150, 300 and 500 feet as the probable width of the dangerous zone around small-pox hospitals. Sir Wm. Jenner has insisted that it is half a mile, and several eminent physicians have favored the theory that infection may be disseminated to a distance of 7,000 or 8,000 feet. Sir J. R. Bennett has thought it probable that infection, like small shot or smoke, might travel a mile or two, and that it is very possible that small-pox poison might strike a person at a distance of fifty miles from its starting point. Reviewing the evidence thus far presented on the subject, Dr. T. Wilson concludes that is not proven that small-pox infection in an active state is ever disseminated in the open air as far as 200 or even 150 feet.

Prof. C. Michie Smith remarks that a green color of the sun, though uncommon, is of much less rare occurrance than is generally supposed, as he has several times observed it since it attracted so much attention in India in September, 1863. He is disposed to ascribe the phenomenon to an abnormally thick stratum of transparent water vapor, and not to volcanic dust. Its rarity may be due, he suggests, to the fact that the water-vapor, when present in sufficient quantity to produce the appearance, is usually partially precipitated, forming clouds. An unusual electric state may possibly at times give the air great clearness when highly charged with vapor. Prof. Smith points out that the air might hold enough volcanic dust to produce the sunset glows which followed the great sun of India, and still have its transparency unaffected and cause no change in the sun's appearance.

The mongoose, which was some years ago brought from India to stop the ravages of the sugar-cane rat in Jamaica, has increased in that island to such an extent, and has become so destructive to poultry and even to fruit and vegetables, that it seems liable to soon become a veritable pest. Since being introduced from Europe, the dog has become very numerous in a wild state in Australia, but, instead of confining itself to subduing the Australian plague of rabbits, it now causes a great slaughter of sheep. The usual fate of the sloat which New Zealand people have imported from England to keep down the rabbits, has multiplied so rapidly that the remedy is expected to become worse than the original affliction in a very short time.

Researches in France by Dr. Schultz have shown that citric acid possesses powerful antiseptic properties, which may give it an important place as a food-preserving substance, since it is believed to be free from the objection of unwholesomeness urged against citric or antiseptic acids. Meat fragments placed in a five per cent. solution of the acid were in a perfect state of preservation at the end of fifteen days. Experimenting upon organized germs, Dr. Schultz found that one drop of a solution of one part acid to 1,000 parts water placed in a liquid containing bacteria and other forms of microscopic life, instantly caused their death.

Mons. Balland has found that the average moisture of the flours of commerce is fourteen per cent. It varies with the hygrometric state of the air, and is generally from one to two per cent greater in winter than in summer.

Oil is now extracted from the seeds of grapes in Italy. Young grapes yield most, and black kinds more than white.

The Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal gives the increase of California physicians at 240 per annum, a number which the State cannot support. It appears that Los Angeles has a hundred regular physicians. The editor says that the doctors are ambitious to flourish in the large cities, and will endure "philosophical starvation" rather than settle in some thriving town where they might ultimately do well.

Harvard University has adopted the Sabbatical notion in a most useful form. It now allows to each of its teachers one year in seven for private study.

Two Peeps at Siam.

It is not a long circuit from the gate of the Captain's garden to that of the famous temple, but even that short distance shows us a few sights which would be sufficiently amazing in any other part of the world. A native house is gravely coming up the river by itself, the father steering it with a long oar, while the children watch its progress from the ladder leading down into the water from the veranda. Under the shade of a huge banyan tree, half a dozen bare-limbed, dusky Siamese boatmen are playing a kind of aboriginal lawn-tennis, using their feet instead of their hands to keep up the ball. Just beyond them, a small native child, with nothing on but the ornamental wreath which encircles the bristly tuft of black hair surmounting its otherwise shaven head, is admiring a magnificent butterfly, almost as large as a sparrow. A little farther on a group of amphibious youngsters are playing in the thick, greasy, soap-colored water, as Western children might play on land, while just across the river we espy a flotilla of light canoes laden with fruit and vegetables, and manned by Siamese market-women, who keep up a perpetual clamor of bargaining as shrill as a chorus of angry parrots.

But the moment we pass the deep, lowbrowed gateway all this vanishes as if it had never been. With one stride we go from the present to the past. The mighty ruins that start up through masses of clinging foliage, in the depths of the Java forests, could hardly look more lonely and forsaken than this strange old fortress of Eastern superstition. Upon every foot of its damp, slimy courtyard, its gaffed, crumbling walls, its storm-worn pillars, its dark, tomb-like galleries, its voiceless cells and shattered images, lies the brand of grim and irrevocable desolation:

"The sisters-ara of the Darmcoite are choked with fallen leaves,
And in the helix of Akasnat her web the spider weaves;
The jackal and the serpent now their midnight wails keen
Where Nadir, lord of East and West, once ruveled and drank deep."

M. Pasteur sucks up the liquid containing the microbes of rabies through a glass tube to inoculate the unfortunate animals who die from hydrophobia a few hours after the poison is injected into their veins. This he is able to do with perfect safety, for the rabid virus is only dangerous when conveyed into the system through inoculation. The scientist is not yet certain as to whether artificial inoculation applied to a subject who has already been bitten by a mad dog would prevent the appearance of symptoms of hydrophobia.

At Madrid a few days ago an opera manager rebuked a dancouse for making a mistake in marking, "You dance like a chicken." The dancer's husband demanded an apology, but the manager denied having insulted him. The husband thereupon plunged a dagger into the heart of his wife's traducer.

A Uniontown (Pa.) dispatch says: "The worst fear touching the fate of the men who were imprisoned in the coal mine at Youngstown, four miles from this place, by the explosion of fire-damp which took place three at 4 o'clock last evening has been fully confirmed. Six of the miners were taken out last evening soon after the disaster, two of them were dead and two of the other four are scarcely human that there is no hope of their recovery. This left from fourteen to eighteen men supposed to be still imprisoned in the mine. The exact number is not certainly known. The work of reaching those men was continued industriously throughout the whole night, and by this morning the dead bodies of twelve of them had been brought out and delivered to their friends and relatives at the mouth of the pit. This makes fourteen dead in all, and, together with the four injured, accounts for eighteen, or the whole number supposed to be in the mine. The scenes at the mouth of the pit as the distressed bodies of the dead were brought to the surface and given into the hands of the wives and relatives was distressing in the extreme, and vividly recalled to mind the pitiful scenes of the terrible calamity which occurred at the opening of the Lessenger mine last February, for the bodies which they knew were coming lifeless to them from the unexplored recesses bowels of the earth. It was a sad spectacle, indeed, and moved to tears many of hundreds who had been drawn to the place by the news of the disaster."

In the Superior Court at Montreal Judge Sicotte ordered fines of $400 or imprisonment for two years to be imposed upon L. A. Senecal, President of the North Shore Railway, for unlawfully bribery in the last election.

Assignments have been made by S. Schlig, a wholesale milliner of San Francisco; George E. Hutchinson, a mining capitalist of Cleveland; William Otto, a shoe dealer in St. Louis.

Denver (Colo.) telegram: "Rumors have reached here of the lynching by vigilantes, in a gorge of seventeen cattle-thieves, captured while in camp in Rock Creek, in the Gore range of mountains, twenty miles north-west of Georgetown. No particulars at present obtainable. The report is thought to be exaggerated."

A Profitable Office.

It conveys an idea of the lucrativeness of high places in England in "the good old days" that in 1824 the then Duke of Grafton stated in the House of Commons that the late Earl of Chesborough had refused $400,000 for the office in his gift of Chief Clerk of the Court of King's Bench. When Lord Ellenborough heard that it was vacant he was on horseback, and, alighting, he wrote in pencil on his saddle his son's appointment, the groom being witness. The place—a complete sinecure—was worth $85,000 a year.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Our loss need in these days to get upon Luther's plan, and pray to God to grow confused and clamorous, to bring them to peace and order through added hums of prayer.—Sara P. Smiley.

WILBUR F. STOREY

Biographical Sketch of the Ex-ceased Proprietor of the Times.

A Life of Great Ambitions, Various Labors, and Brilliant Successes.

Wilbur F. Storey, editor and proprietor of the Chicago Times, died at his residence in Evanston, in that city, on the 27th of October. His illness was comparatively short, but it was generally known that his physical powers had been impaired and his mind clouded for some time before his death in consequence of excessive and incessant labor. Long associated with the career of the remarkable man whose name is the title of this sketch, the writer of these lines has watched his passing away with sadness.

Wilbur F. Storey was one of the most widely known residents of Chicago, his reputation as a journalist ranking international. Whom in his vigor he was a most aggressive, and at the same time combative and well poised. Those qualities were in the great newspaper which he edited and successfully for so many years. Its influence was always on the side of faithful friends, and at the same time merciless enemies. Its influence, and the Times, when he was actively at its helm, stamped and stamped the decrees of Wilbur F. Storey was born Dec. 19, 1819, at Shirley, Massachusetts, and was one of the celebrated Storey family. He began life as a printer in the office of the Boston Courier, and was subsequently connected with the Boston Atlas. When he was 17 years old his father died, after which he attended school for a year, and then entered the printing business. He remained in Boston until he was 17, with the exception of one year, during which he attended school. At 17 he moved to Middlebury, Vt., and entered the office of the Middlebury Free Press, a weekly printing business. He remained there

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

BY TELEPHONE,

Via Petoskey.

Tuesday Night's Dispatches.

Our returns were furnished by Dr. Crouter over the wire from Petoskey. They were read at J. Milo Eaton's office, which was open as democratic headquarters until a late hour. Numerous republicans took advantage of the excellent arrangements which had been made for receiving returns, and came there for their information.

Of the returns at large we have room for but a brief summary.

Sixty precincts in Boston give Cleveland 17,918, Blaine 11,428, Butler 2,137.

In two wards of Kingston, N. Y., Blaine's majority is 122, a democratic gain of 55.

Twenty seven districts in Brooklyn give Cleveland a majority of 1,409.

One hundred districts in New York state gives Cleveland 41,675, Blaine 30,825, Butler 1,336, St. John 747. In 167 districts Cleveland's majority is 11,135.

Returns from Virginia indicate seven to ten thousand majority for Cleveland.

One hundred and seventeen districts in South Carolina give Cleveland 43,453, Blaine 21,496, Butler 944, St. John 501.

Two districts in Buffalo give Cleveland 894, Blaine 802.

Eighty one precints in Boston give Cleveland 24,273, Blaine 13,511, Butler 2,810.

Democratic majority in Maitland, N. Y., will be 2,000 against 2,311 in 1880.

Nearly every district in New York city gave Cleveland a majority.

Robinson, republican, probably elected governor of Massachusetts. Electoral ticket close and in doubt.

One district in Columbus, O., gives Cleveland over 100 majority.

Kings, Queens, and Richmond counties gives Cleveland 23,000 majority.

Thirty one towns in Massachusetts, outside of Boston, give Blaine a majority of 2,600.

Providence, R. I., gives Blaine 3,000 majority.

Four wards in Cleveland give 974 net republican majority.

Eight precincts in Wheeling, W. Va., show a democratic loss of 214, since October election.

Cleveland's majority 458 in Waterbury, Conn.

Maine and Mercer counties, Ohio, show republican gains.

Slight republican gains in Cincinnati over October election.

Kings county, N. Y., elects 8 democrats and 1 republican to congress.

Fifty Michigan districts give Blaine 7,561, Cleveland 5,690, Butler 2,080, Begole 5,967, Alger 8,164, Preston 216. Net democratic gain 521.

Forty six precincts in Louisville, Ky., give Cleveland a majority of 1,-750.

Four wards in Cleveland, Ohio, give a republican gain of over 500.

Twenty four cities in Michigan outside of Detroit give the fusion electoral ticket 368 majority, and Begole 822 majority.

CHEST COUNTY.

Cross Village township gives fusion state ticket 123, Hampton 128, republican state ticket 22, Buckley 17.

Bear Creek township (Petoskey) gives fusion state 340, Hampton 268, republican state 318, Buckley 421.

Wednesday Dispatches.

A dispatch received at 2:30 Wednesday says New York will give Cleveland a fair majority, sure.

Over the Western Union wire announced that New York had gone republican by 20,000. Democrats, however, did not believe it, and prepared to wait awhile before giving up all hope.

Wednesday afternoon, J. L. Newberry, of Petoskey, telephoned J. Milo Eaton that New York had gone for Cleveland by a sure and safe majority.

The following message sent by M. F. Quaintance of Petoskey, to Dr. Crouter Wednesday evening, served to raise democratic hopes to a high pitch, and unless later returns contradict it, Cleveland is certainly elected. "California, Nevada, Wisconsin, Indiana, New York, Delaware, Connecticut, and the solid south has gone for Cleveland. Michigan claimed by fusion."

These states give 232 of the electoral vote, without Michigan. Although Michigan gave Garfield a plurality of over 50,000, take from it the 34,000 votes cast for Weaver, and it leaves only 19,950 to overcome to carry the state for fusion. If Wisconsin can overcome a plurality of 29,000 without fusion, Michigan certainly ought to do as well with fusion.

Thursday Morning.

A message from C. J. Faithorp to J. Milo Eaton this morning, says New York is so close that both parties claim it.

Indiana will require the official count to decide.

Vermont is doubtful.

Wisconsin is republican.

California republican by a small majority.

West Virginia doubtful.

Michigan undoubtedly fusion, although the election of Alger is claimed.

C. S. Hampton had 270 majority in Emmet.

J. L. Newberry is elected judge of probate by 120.

The whole fusion ticket in Emmet is elected except prosecuting attorney. M. W. George, republican, was elected by a small majority.

Kings, Queens, and New York counties gave Cleveland over 75,000 majority.

A message received at 2:30 says that the New York Tribune concedes Cleveland's election, and the National committee have telegraphed their congratulations to Gov. Cleveland.

Rhymes of Animals.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes: I strung the following lines together to tickle the ears of my two little boys, 4 and 6 years old. They tease their mamma over and over again, and they fetch the big illustrated dictionary to have her point out the animals with such strange names, and tell what she can about them. This fancy for rhyme or rhythm is, I suppose, is a characteristic of nearly all children and perhaps the publication of this will amuse a wider circle than my little household. The aim has been, after euphony, to have the most incongruous animals in juxtaposition:

Alligator, Beetle, Porcupine, Whale, Ferret-fink, Prairie Dog-ally, Snail, Crocodile, Monkey, Buffalo, Hare, Dromedary, Leopard, Multurtle, Bear, Elephant, Kanger, Pelican, Ox, Fly-catch, Reindeer, Anaconda, Fox, Guinea-pig, Dolphin, Antelope, Goose, Hummingbird, Weasel, Pickerel, Mouse, Hen, Rhinoceros, Owl, Kangaroo, Jackal, Opossum, Toad, Cockatoo, Kingfisher, Peacock, Axolotle, Bat, Lizard, Ichneumon, Hedge-hog, Hyena, Ibex, Flamingo, Gosling, Bison, Mouse, Chimpanzee, Spider, Cuttle-fish, Grouse, Ocelot, Thousand, Wolverine, Ask, Peccadillo, Hissing Kettle, Hawk, Quail, Hippopotamus, Armadillo, Moth, Rattle-snake, Lion, Woodpecker, Sloth, Salamander, Goldfinch, Angleworm, Dog, Tiger, Flamingo, Scorpion, Frog, Unicorn, Ostrich, Nautilus, Mule, Viper, Cattle, Reindeer, Snipe, Whippoorwill, Beaver, Catapede, Fawn, Xanthic Canary, Pollywog, Swan, Yellowhammer, Eagle, Hyena Lark, Zebra, Chameleon, Butterfly, Shark.

Blood Heat.

Blood heat is set down on Fahrenheit thermometers at 98 degrees, but more careful investigation has shown that the temperature of a healthy person is between 102 and 103. One-half a degree either way indicates an abnormal condition, while 1 degree below would make a doctor shake his head ominously. When a fever sends the temperature up to 106 or 1.7 it depends entirely upon the amount of fuel on hand how long the fire will continue to burn. The tinder in the blood may be removed before the machinery is burned out and the fires smothered, or the vitality may be kept up until the tinder is all consumed and the fires go down of their own accord.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Chloride of lime should be used with care. A young lady recently put a large quantity in a clothes press where there was a nasty smell. Alex. Campbell took to the office of the Elk Rapids Progress, a pear which weighed 24 ounces. He does not know what variety it is—says he bought it for a Bartlett. Mr. Campbell says that 19 ounces is the heaviest pear he had ever heard of, and further says that six of them lacked half an ounce of weighing six pounds.

Changes at East Jordan.

D. C. Loveday has sold the hotel known as the Hulbert house, at East Jordan, to D. B. Jerrie, who will complete the improvements already started by Loveday, and will refurnish the house and open it to the public as soon as the work can be completed. Dan will run the house under his own supervision and under a new name and will no doubt have a good patronage, as he is a social, jovial fellow, liked by everybody, and will spare no pains to make his guests comfortable.

D. C. Loveday takes in part payment the building occupied by Jerrie as billiard parlors and will probably remove his furniture business to that building May 1st, next. He still retains the opposite corner where Caton & Sherman do business, and also the dock property.

A MEMORY.

BY MAGGIE L. CROCKER.

I sweep a broken, hollow chord
Of memory's chirp to-night,
And mind it is too sere to use
Mournfully clear delight.
Then coming with a tone for tones,
In sweet and happy hues,
The much-loved all dashed with tears,
From the brink of the blues.

The gold and purple-stained gloam
I offer now the reeds to wind,
Connect me not in a dream
With happy smile I press her hand
I feel her breath upon my cheek,
I hear her mother thank for
The happy one I bring of speak
So modest such, so sure I love.

Why need I now—for all the years
My soul has sent to hers a song,
The faithful answer to it bears,
The love-bond and the throng
Of memories, whereon I am
The minstrel, where I sing
And now I wear a happy face
As on our meeting day.

But the cadence of a sorrow in it
Shimmers all my speech of joy,
Over the tone of my delight
We clothed our hearts to employ
The every-day
Of memory which is ever near,
Feeling and thought.

MISS MARTHA'S MATCHMAKING.

BY MARY E. WILKINS.

"I declare he looked sorry, Robert," Miss Martha said, innocent of any intention to pry. I don't know what you and the rabbits can see in natural history."

Robert Ackerman looked at his sister for an odd moment. Then he said gently:

"Martha D. Van Ness!" Martha! Have you forgotten? Under the date of June 10, 1860, you wrote in your diary, 'Robert Ackerman has been at home a week. He is very much changed. He looks sorry. I wonder what is the matter with him?' Martha, I remember that perfectly well. I remember that I was in the room when you wrote it. I remember that I was sorry, and that I looked sorry. I suppose I looked sorry because you looked sorry. Martha, I have looked sorry ever since."

Miss Martha looked at her brother. Her face was very gentle as she asked:

"Robert, was it Alice Van Ness?"

Robert Ackerman looked at his sister. He looked at the floor. He looked at the ceiling. He looked at the wall. Then he looked at his sister again. He looked at her with a sort of desperate appeal.

"Martha," he said, "I have been a fool. I have been a fool for twenty years. I have been a fool for twenty years, and I have been ashamed to be anything else. I have been ashamed to look you in the face. I have been ashamed to look Alice in the face. I have been ashamed to look myself in the face. I have been ashamed to look anybody in the face. I have been ashamed to look the whole world in the face. I have been ashamed to look the whole universe in the face. I have been ashamed to look the whole infinite universe in the face. I have been ashamed to look—"

"Robert," said Miss Martha, "I am afraid you are getting excited. Don't look so. Please don't look so. Robert, you frighten me. Please don't look so. Robert, you frighten me very much. Please don't look so. Robert, you frighten me very much indeed. Please don't look so. Robert, you frighten me very much indeed, and I am afraid you will frighten Thomas. Please don't look so. QUARTZ JEWELRY.

An Industry Confined to the State of California.

The making of quartz jewelry is peculiarly a California industry. Its manufacture was begun in the early days following the gold discovery. Though quartz fit for the art of the jeweler is found all over California, the best is that coming from the mines of the Grass valley. It is not often the miner comes across rock which would find a sale among the jewelers. The gold has to be evenly distributed and notlumpy, so that it has passed through the necessary stages to prepare it for setting the spots and seams are well scattered through the rock. The quartz which a miner thus procures is sent down either to a bank or an assay office, and from there the jeweler receives notice that a consignment is ready for auction. The bids then depend entirely upon the state of the stock held by the different bidders, and should a jeweler happen to be in want of quartz, the amount paid would be double that which he would pay on any other occasion.

As a rule the jeweler pays much higher for the rough quartz than would one who desired to purchase the gold to melt. The quartz as taken by the jeweler is brought in lumps weighing from one to ten pounds, and in this condition it is handed over to a mechanic for the purpose of being cut into slabs. The process is an easy one and nearly similar to that followed by the marble-cutters. The saw by which this operation is performed is circular and made of sheet tin and charged with water and emery. The quartz is held up to it, and in its revolutions it divides the quartz. The slabs in which the quartz is cut do not generally exceed one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The preliminary work is then over. It is not till the jewely is made, the fittings, as it were, that these slabs are again cut, then fitted into the gold and cemented. It is then ground off level with the gold and finally polished until it assumes that brightness as when exposed for sale.

The coloring of quartz is extremely rich and varied, being found in the same section of country in white and black and pink and blue. Hitherto there has been no preference expressed by the buyer for the color of the quartz in the trinket. Perhaps this has been obviated by the jeweler, who, in the manufacture of even the smallest article, never fails to give as varied an assortment of quartz as is possible. The method of the valuation of quartz rock is peculiar. It is first weighed as any other material, and then under water, as rock weighs next to nothing when under water surface. The amount of gold imbedded in the rock can by this process be determined.

There have not been men wanting who have attempted to make artificial quartz to be used in the manufacture of large goods, in the way of card tables and similar articles, but decided failure has followed each and every at tempt. Whether quartz jewelry will ever become fashionable is a question which the business men of this city give no long thought. They declare their inability to use quartz fantastically, or to sufficiently fine it down so as to cut it into delicate flowers and leaves. There is an air of substantiality about all the trinkets made for ladies, which, though handsome, have somewhat of a clumsy look. And the jeweler has to contend against a difficulty which lies on the opposite side. Quartz cannot be had in sufficiently large pieces to use in the manufacture of objects of use and ornament.

Some years ago a jewel-casket was made in this city for the wife of a certain rich judge, which in itself was a marvel of beauty and elegance, it being of solid gold and quartz, having four panels, each five inches in length and three in width. The cost incurred in this work was enormous and the amount of labor incredible. Some slight estimate of the trouble may be formed when the maker of the casket had to employ a man who traveled for two entire months through the mines in search for quartz of sufficient size to execute the order.

After diligent inquiry among several workers it was estimated that over $150,000 worth of quartz jewelry is disposed of in this city during a year and not $2,000 worth is bought by people to wear in San Francisco.—San Francisco Caronicle.

Handsome English Girls.

There are more handsom women in Brighton than anywhere else in the world, says an English journal. They are so common that gradually the standard of beauty in the mind rises, and good-looking women who would be admired in other places pass by without notice. Where all the flowers are roses you do not see a rose. They are all pinup,—not to say fat, which would be profane,—very plump, and have the glow of youth and bloom upon the cheeks. They do not suffer from "pernicious nonsuma," their evil household pest that London physicians are not unfrequently called upon to cure, when the cheeks are white as paper, and have to be rosied by minute doses of arsenic. They extract arsenic from the air. The way they step and the carriage of the form show how full they are of life and spirits. Sarah Bernhardt will not come to Brighton fi she can help it less she should lose the high art angmarity and slipperiness of shape which suits her role. Dresses seem always to fit well, because people somewow seem to expand them.

It is pleasant to see the girls walk, because the limbs do not drag, the feet are lifted gaily and with ease. Horse exercise adds a deeper glow to the face, their ride upon the downs first, out of pure conning, for the air is certain to impart a freshness to the features, like dew on a flower, and then return and walk their horses to and fro on the king's road, certain of admiration. However often these tricks are played they are always successful. These philanthropic folks who want to reform woman's dress and call upon the world to observe how the present style contracts the chests and forces the organs of the body out of place (what a queer expression it seems, "organs!"), have not a chance in Brighton.

Girls lace tight and "go in" for the tip of fashion, yet they bloom and flourish as green bay trees, and do not find their skirts any obstacle in walking or tennis. The horse-riding that goes on is a thing to be chronicled; they are always on horseback, and you may depend upon it that it is better for them than all the gymnastic exercises ever invented. The liability to strain, and even internal injury, which is incurred by gymnastic exercises ought to induce sensible people to be oxtremely careful how they permit their daughters to sacrifice themselves on this scientific altar. Buy them horses to ride if you want them to enjoy good health and sound constitutions. Nothing like horses for women. Send the professors to Sunkim and put the girls on horseback.

Whether Brighton grows handsome girls or whether they flock there by instinct, or whether, as I love saying there, is an inquiry too difficult to pursue. There they are, one at least in every group, and you have to walk, as the Spaniards say, with your head over your shoulder, continually looking back at those who have passed. The only antidote known is to get married before you visit the place, and doubts have been expressed as to its efficacy. In the south coast of Scrtile there is nothing done but heart-breaking. It is so common it is like hammering flints for road mending; nobody cares if your heart is in pieces. They break hearts on horseback, and while walking, playing tennis, shopping—actually at shopping, not to mention parties of every kind. No one knows where the next danger will be encountered—at the very next corner, perhaps. Feminine garments have an irresistible flutter in the sea breeze; feathers have a beckoning motion. No one can be altogether good in Brighton, and that is the great charm of it. The language of the eye is cultivated to a marvelous degree; as we say of dogs, they quite talk with their eyes.

"The Voudoo Doctor."

With the advance of education among the colored people, the business of the voudoo doctors became less lucrative. They find enonch dupes, however, to make their nefarious practice yield them a pretty good living. The voudoo doctor is generally an old white-haired darky, who walks with a crooked cane and carries something resembling an old army haversack slung across his shoulders. As he walks along he occasionally stops, looks upward, waves his stick in a peculiar way and seems to hold mysterious converse with the invisible spirits of the air, if such there be. All these antics have their effect upon the superstitious negro, especially those of the female sex, who are the largest patrons of the bogus doctor. In his bag or haversack he carries a queer assortment, the toenails of dead men, roots and herbs, curious pieces of iron, bits of woolen, with which he pretends to make marvelous cures.

It was during slave time the voudoo doctor flourished. He did a thriving business among runaway negroes, who were promised immunity from punishment in case of recapture for a small sum.

One of the voudoo doctor's methods of operating is to secure a black chicken and two pieces of silver from a dupe. He then procures a skillet, which he half fills with water, placing the pieces of silver in the skillet opposite each other. He then requests his dupe to mentally name one of the pieces after the enemy whom he desires to circumvent. When the water begins to boil he drops an occasional feather from the black chicken into the skillet, mumbling something which is unintelligible. As soon as the water boils the pieces of money begin to rise and fall, as they naturally would do, and by a skillful manipulation of the skillet he brings one of the pieces on top of the other—the one beneath always being the one named after the enemy of his dupe. For this the dupe is expected to pay according to his means—from $1 up to $10.

Another voudoo trick is to pretend to sew a $1 or $5 bill in the upper hand of the pants to whom you desire to have actually secreting the money and sewing a piece of folded paper in the pants instead.

Still another voudoo trick is to bury a small package wrapped in red flannel and get a dupe to dig it up. When the package is found it is said by the voudoo doctor to be a good omen, for which he charges the dupe a handsome fee.

An old voudoo doctor in West Washington recently acquired quite a reputation by his alleged cure of a colored girl afflicted with rheumatism, his recipe being a decoction of sassafras, red pepper, flue and coarse salt, and soap. For a small vial of this he charged $1.50 and for a personal visit $5.

The more mysterious the voudoo doctor is, the more patients he obtains. They are seldom arrested, as they enjoin secrecy on their patrons, who generally observe their requests. If a patient survives their treatment, the cure is attributed to the voudoosist, and if he dies his friends are ashamed to confess that they have been victimized.—Washington Post.

THE CATS OF BROADWAY.

Pet Animals in the Shops Which Are Polite to Customers and Keep the Mice Away.

"No shop is complete nowadays without a cat," said a Broadway policeman. "My beat along the upper part of Broadway takes me right through the shopping district, and when I go home at night I have to walk down Sixth avenue, so that I have a pretty fair opportunity to watch the cats. The first case that ever came to my notice was about two years ago, when I went into a furnishing-goods store on Broadway to buy a collar. Well, sir, I went in and asked the man for some collars, and he dumped a lot on the show-case. A big Maltese cat which had been lying on the door-mat trotted back to where I stood, jumped on the counter and then on the show-case, and walked deliberately to where the collars lay. She was a beautiful cat, with big eyes and a soft, gray coat. She sat down quietly, looked in my face, and watched me while I selected the collars. Every few minutes she would put out her paw and gently touch whatever collar I seemed to have in my hand. Finally, when I had chosen one, and it had been wrapped up for me, she gave the bundle a gentle pat with her paw, then bounced back on the floor again, and went back to her place on the door-mat. The shopkeeper told me that every customer who came in received the same treatment from the cat, and when a man was buying a big bill of goods the Maltese would follow him around from one case to another, and always accompanied him to the door when he left, which was a bit of politeness that the cat never showed to a small buyer.

"Every drug-store on Broadway has its pet cat, and they are all of them fine, well-fed, and good-natured animals. There is one that lies in the front window among a lot of sponges in the winter time. When I first saw that cat I thought it was stuffed. I passed it three or four times every afternoon for a week, but never thought it was alive. It lay in one position with its head curled down on its paws, and never changed its position during the afternoon. I stood watching it once for a long time through the window, and the clerk in the store, just to show me it was alive, poked it up, the cat giving a lazy, stretching kind, rubbed its nose against the clerk's hand, and then went to sleep again.

"They say in Paris, where cats abound drug-stores, as they keep the mice away from the horse and sweet things. There is a big Persian cat in a drug-store corner of Thirtieth street, which knows as much as any dog I ever saw. It is a beauty, too. According to my mind, it is the handsomest cat in New York. It is as black as the ace of spades and as shiny as patent leather. It is a young cat, but it has already learned to recognize the regular customers of the place. It has a comfortable corner in the doorway, where it sleeps in the day-time, and at night it lounges around the soda fountain. There is not a mouse in the place. The cat will move about on the shelves among delicate bottles and fine glassware, but it has never broken a thing. If you go into the shop more than once it will recognize you, and will always have a way come forward to meet you. The customers have got in the habit of stopping and rubbing the head when they go in the shop, and the result is it frots out naturally to meet its friends. That cat is a regular master of ceremonies.

"On the corner above there is a big yellow cat which is growing old and lazy. It is a great favorite with lady customers, and when they come in to give an order and sit down in a chair the cat always comes along, jumps up in their laps, and purrs affectionately. There is hardly a shop along Broadway that has not a pet cat, and everyone of the shopkeepers can tell you fine stories about what his cat can do. I know for a fact that there are now very few clever cats in these shops. They are better than dogs, because they keep the rats and mice away, and do not interfere with the customers. No danger of their getting mad, and it costs little or nothing to keep a cat. I know a cat in a butcher shop on Sixth avenue, near Thirty-third street, which has told out for itself a place near the front door. The butcher sprinkles his floor with sawdust three times a day, and every time he does it the cat hops upon the window-sill and watches the operation closely. When it is finished and the floor is thorough covered the cat hops down and selects a spot directly in the middle of the wide doorway and begins slowly to clear a spot for itself. First it moves its paw around in a small circle, and finally brushes the sawdust away until a clean space is left. This spot is about two feet in diameter, and always perfectly round. The carpenter couldn't make a more accurate circle. It is invariably in the middle of the doorway, and when the cat has every bit of sawdust off this particular spot it lies down with its nose toward the sidewalk, and dozes. If a man or woman comes in and kicks the sawdust into the cleaned circle the cat carefully brushes it out again.

"These ain't very exciting stories, but they are truthful. I might tell you about a cat which went up to the seventh story of a burning building and carried a sick man down the waterpipe safely to the street, or give you many other fairy tales, but you wouldn't believe them, and so what would be the use? I had rather tell a truthful story and have it believed than a large tale that no one credits."—N. Y. Sun.

FINE FEATHERS.

How Ostrich Plumes and Tips Are Imitated.

"Take the year right through," said a feather dealer to a reporter yesterday afternoon, "and you'll find by observation that San Francisco ladies wear feathers on their hats to a greater extent than they are worn in any other city of this size in the world."

"How's that?" asked the reporter.

"It's the climate, I suppose—the cool even temperature of this peninsula, which permits sealskins and Winter fashioned hats to be worn during the greater part of the year."

"But the dealers in fancy feathers don't complain on this account?"

"Not they. It's a very good business here, except during two or three months of the year, when people are well supplied or have gone into the country with their flower and ribbon-trimmed straw hats. A good deal of my trade is with ladies who have old feathers to dye or curl or to cut up into tips."

"What is a tip?"

"A tip is one of those short, bobbing feathers so stylish just now. Last year the fashionable craze was over wild birds' wings and heads for hats and turbans, but this year it's tips."

"Are they mostly cut from ostrich feathers?"

"Well, that is the supposition; but, bless you, we don't sell more than half the number of real ostrich tips that we do of imitations. It's a shame to cut up a nice, long ostrich plume into tips, and the very short ostrich feathers are rarely of good texture and fiber—that is, the African kind are not. Many of the East India importations of this sort are very good, however, but they come very high. So all kinds of feathers are fixed up in imitation of those of the ostrich. There's the rhea, or American ostrich; the adjutant, peacock, pheasant, eagle and others. The kind used here to a great extent, especially in imitating ostrich tips, is the South American vulture. I will show you some of these imitations and you will see how they may be distinguished from the real article."

Comparisons were then made between different varieties of feathers, and the difference between the genuine and the counterfeit pointed out. It was shown how an "ostrich" plume of great length might be made by piecing the soft, short feathers of the vulture on a framework of whalebone, stiff cloth or other material, the only way to detect the imposition on public credulity without direct comparison being by a glance at the inside of the feather, which will discloses the framework. The feathers of cocks are also placed together in this manner, and when curled and made a handsome plume, though more easily distinguished from the ostrich feathers by the thin and wiry nature of the fibers.

"What is the difference in price between imitation and real plumes and tips?" was asked.

"Real ostrich feathers run from $2.50 up to $20 each. I will make you all the imitations you want at 10 cents up to $4 or $5 apiece."

"Are the long plumes worn to a great extent?"

"Oh, yes; they always will be, too, as there is nothing handsomer on a hat than a finely-curled plume."

"Are all these feathers dyed before being worn?"

"Nearly all. Only when a great while do we get a feather right off the ostrich which does not require coloring. You see, uniform color is always desired by ladies, and this is a rare thing in freshly-plucked ostrich feathers. They are generally like this," said the fashion man, showing some long white and brown feathers, the colors of which were mixed, like pepper and salt, over the downy plumes. "Here is a rarity," and he uncovered a lovely brown feather, which would have made a fashionable young lady wild with envy if she had seen it on a rival belle's hat. "Then they come in grays and sometimes in navy whites, and the latter are rare," said the dealer.

The various methods of dyeing feathers were explained. They are not materially different from the modes of coloring straw or dress goods. A feather may be colored a hundred different shades, beginning with a light one, and wears well, if properly cared for.

"Where do the San Francisco feather dealers get their supplies of the ostrich articles?" the reporter inquired.

"Chiefly from New York. We used to import them, but for some reason or other we find that we can get the same feather in New York for $4 that we would have to pay $5 francs for in Paris. Beside, there is an enormous customs duty to be paid."

"Do you get many feathers from Australia?"

"Not only a few, but they are of good quality."

"How do the feathers of the ostriches lassoed in this country compare with the foreign importations?"

"Very favorable, those that I have seen. There is no reason why the ostrich should not thrive in our southern countries. I am well acquainted with the ostrich-growing industry, having once owned an ostrich farm near Calexico. One thing I have noticed about ostrich-growing in this country, which I don't like is the failure to secure good stock to start with. The man who selects from the best birds, and those varieties having the finest plumage, will be the man who makes the most money out of the business. In ostrich-raising, as in everything else, a person must start right in order to succeed."

"What are the going colors in feathers just now?"

"Gold-brown and bright and dark garnet."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Morning-Glory Girls.

In the pages of a novel the girl who has a morning call always comes tripping into the parlor, dressed in a soft, fleecy gown of white, or a rose-colored cashmere with a girdle of bright ribbons, or a neat house dress of some shimmering gray fabric. She puts away her soft brown hair from her untroubled face, and her eyes have the rested brightness of immortal youth, and much more of the same sort of infinitum. This is in a book. Now take the young lady of real life. She has breakfasted and is amusing herself with a book when a caller is announced. If it is a young gentleman, and she does not expect him, she sends word that she will be "down immediately." Then she tears a bandage from her queenly brow, which looks as if it had been cemented together, and picks out the bandolino bangs. Then hurried toilet ablutions, a white Mother Hubbard with a pink sash bow and shoulder knot, takes the place of the waist and skirt which were "good enough for home." The old slip-shod slippers are replaced by pink bose and operaties. There is a hasty skirmish with the powder puff, a shrinking dash of cologne, and with an embroidered mouchoir in her hand the young lady descends to the parlor and finds her younger brother on intimate terms with the caller, who is no other than her escort of the previous evening when she was arrayed in purple and fine lace. He does not realize that she is en masquerade just now as much as she was then; that he is the hero of a scene in real life, and that if he had not her in the hall as she appears in the bosom of her family he would probably have mistaken her for her own maid. He could scarcely, with this vision before him, be brought to understand that her young ladyhood is so completely a matter of personal adornment.

It would be almost a safe thing to assert that out of fifteen young ladies of leisure only five could be seen at a morning call without the required wait of half an hour. In many families where the daughter is a social belle there is so much preliminary hurrying and scurrying to get her into presentable shape for an unexpected call as if it were an emergency of fire. And this is not due to any poverty of wearing apparel. The young lady can have anything she desires to wear—has, indeed, quantities of beautiful clothing—but what is the use of making an elaborate toilet if there isn't anybody to see it? In this case father and mother, sisters and brothers are all nobodies.

A waist of one dress and a skirt of another, both shabby and soiled, a dilapidated fichu, hair en papillote, last night's powder still visible in streaks, and a general yaw-aw-yaw-aw yaw-aw of weariness. What is this a description of—a farmer's scarecrow? No! A modern belle, who begins life at the wrong end of the day.

A judicious mother who brought up alone and unaided a family of daughters, all of whom fill honored places in society, never allowed her girls to appear at the breakfast table in a social undress. They must be fresh, clean and with a finish of collar and coiffure, or back they went to their rooms. There was no running away when the door bell of that famous range. The young ladies were always fit to be seen in their nicely laundried ruffled gingham and breakfast shawl, and there was no appalling contrast between their evening and morning toilet. Each was suited to themselves and the occasion on which it was worn. In the rosegarden of girls she who blooms the longest begins the day as a morning glory.

Clara Belle at N-w-yort.

One of the Knickerbocker girls whom I met and liked the most is Clara Belle N. Osbow. She is a philosophic little thing. I noticed that her bosbe husband was being solowly, gently, but none the less surely, let down from the heights of shadowy sentiment to the solidities of human activity. Do you follow me? Let me illustrate my meaning. She waltzed one night with the infatuated fellow, and on another for at my side, he whispered rapturously: "I really think you have wings on your bose; you dances so lig-ht-ly." "Not a wing," she replied. "The fact is that I had No. 2 shoes on No. 3 feet, and I felt as though I were sunning around on my nakles. But just now my pet corn stings through the numbness." "Ah!" sighed the persistently romantic chap, "then the wings extended invisibly from your shoulders, dear girl." "Well, it's safe to bet," the lovelorn seraph responded, "that if any wings are attached to me they are somewhere outside of my corset, for there isn't room for a half a breath inside."

Dr. Pratt, of London, states in a lecture that in 1,000 married men between the ages of 25 and 30 there are 8 deaths; in the same number of bachelors there are 10 deaths; the widowers number 25.

POLITICAL.

It's a little early to be forming clubs for the Presidential race, but the Cleveland Democracy organized around J. Randall Club, of New Castle, does not care for that. Every member of it wants to be thought the only real Randall man.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Chimipy, the exp-priest, lectured at Montreal, to Russell Hall. His sentiments provoked a riot, in which he was rescued by the police. The lights were turned out and the windows broken.

Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote are reported to be preparing a scheme of parliamentary redistribution to be submitted to the House of Commons at an early date. The plan contemplates the equation of urban from rural constituencies, the compilers of small boroughs, and the distribution among all towns having less than 10,000 inhabitants.

A cable despatch announces the death of Henry Fawcett, British Postmaster-General and Professor of Political Economy at Cambridge University. Mr. Fawcett was born in 1835, and graduated with the highest mathematical honors from Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1856. Soon after he was made blind for life through the accidental discharge of his father's gun while both were out shooting. In spite of his calamity Henry Fawcett turned his attention to the study of economic science, and he soon became Professor of Political Economy in the University, a position he held at the time of his death. His lecture room was ever crowded. In 1867 Mr. Fawcett married Miss Millicent Garrett, by whom he leaves several children. At the time of his death he was Postmaster-General and represented the borough of Hackney in the House of Commons.

The political excitement in New York, during the reception of the election returns, exceeded anything of the kind ever witnessed in that city. At one time it was feared the office of the Western Union Telegraph building would be invaded by a mob. A New York despatch says a closing examination was made by 2,000 men at the Western Union building. The crowd gathered so quickly it was difficult to imagine whence they came from. Some lies on the outskirts of the crowd cut a rope which kept a flume and beam hammer down Broadway in position and they had to pull it down. The crowd in front of the Western Union Building was soon crowded larger every moment, and was at block and carry a great deal, many men and cried "Hurrah for Blaine!" "Hurrah for Cleveland!" "Three cheers for Blaine!" "There's no recall," he answered all over with noise." A mob formed in Printing House Square, and "Three cheers for Cleveland!" "Three cheers for Blaine!" "Who ran?" "Who ran?" "Who ran?" was heard on every side. The excitement became so great that the police were compelled to clear the streets. Police reports, however, have been received from all parts of the country, and the excitement has subsided. The returns are coming in rapidly, and the prospects are that the election will be decided in favor of Cleveland.

The Supreme Court of Rhode Island has decided that the Governor-elect, Hon. Alfred H. Littlefield, is entitled to the office, and that the present Governor, Augustus O. Bourn, must vacate the office on the first Tuesday in January, 1882 eighteen votes to spare in the electoral college.

This is the nation's vindication of the man whose moral character the republican managers tried to enrich with vile slanders. This is the nation's total of disapproval of the method employed by party managers and others in official position to turn the machinery of government to the one idea of perpetuating the republican party and enriching its leaders.

Congress is democratic by a good working majority.

Michigan has partially redeemed herself by the election of a fusion legislature, although the executive and state officers are still republican by a small majority.

Michigan's delegation in congress remains the same politically, though the conditions are reversed in four districts, the second and fourth from fusion to republican, and the eighth and tenth from republican to fusion.

Cutcheon is elected to congress, but by a majority much reduced from that received two years ago.

Finnecy is elected to the state senate.

Emmet district sends Charles S Hampton to the legislature by a handsome majority.

Charlevoix county elects the entire republican ticket, except treasurer, but by largely reduced majorities.

Over the good work done we rejoice.

TO MY NOSE.

Fair Nose! whose rubies red have cost me many a barrel
Of claret wine and white,
Who warrest in thy rich and sumptuous apparel
Such red and purple light!
Great Nose! who looks at thee through some long glass at revel,
As red as the beauty thinks,
Would not resemblest not the nose of some poor devil
Who only water drinks.
The barkey-seek doth wear resembling thee, his wages,
How many rich men now
Have me so rich a nose? To paint thee, many bottles,
And many time I plow.
The glass my result is for this illumination:
My coat is the wine,
With which I've painted thee more red than the carnation,
By drinking of the line.
'Tis said it hurts the eyes; but shall they be the makers
Wine is the cure for sit;
Better the windows both should suffer some disaster
Than have the whole house fall.

All Halloween.

BY ALMA M'KEE.

PART I.

"Retract those cruel words, dear father, and call me your own Luella once more."

The speaker, a young girl of eighteen summers, with hair and eyes the hue of the raven's wing, cheeks flushed scarlet with emotion, sat in the midst of evergreens, moss and holly, pleading in vain with an erect yet aged man of sixty-odd years—her father.

"Never!" was his firm, decided answer. "Gilbert Ainsley shall never be a son-in-law of mine; I swear it!" and he set his teeth firmly together.

"But, father, dear, I love him. In days gone by, when you were young, did you not love my mother even as we two love? Think twice, dear papa, ere you doom me to a life of misery and seclusion."

She arose from her verdant seat and stood before him, her beautiful eyes full of a world of pleading in their liquid depths, her hands clasped beseechingly before her. Who could resist such eloquence and beauty?

"Enough!" he thundered. "Did you ever know me to say one thing and mean another? Accept Danton Merrivale with his coffers a-your, and all will be well; refuse, and a father's curse follows you." After this cruel threat, his form seemed its usual height, and he left the little salon, slamming the door behind him until the glass trembled, by way of emphasis.

Why he knew not, mean the suffering girl threw herself upon her knees, and, burying her face in the cushion of the friendly chair, wept aloud.

The sound of many approaching footsteps aroused her to a sense of self-pride, and, springing quickly to her feet, she hurriedly bathed her swollen, aching eyes in cologne water, kept the rein in case of an emergency.

No sooner had she resumed her seat than the door opened with a crash, and a bevy of pretty, teasing girls, and as many fun-loving boys, entered the quiet sanctum.

"There you are, Lu," exclaimed a couple of the most care-free, "like a hermit in his cell, and, I pr sane, quoting the old words of Burns: 'I cares for nobody, an' nobody cares for me.' To which with saying all s-upended with a merry laugh, until the room fairly shook in striving to recho the sounds with justice.

"Oh, girls, do be quiet," Luella Farleigh exclaimed, with a playful shake of one forefinger. "Only see! I have but one wreath completed and a cross begun. Had I better rest like a lazy? It is lovely? See how beautifully the trails over the white japonicas and fuchsias." And she held up the trailing vine admiringly.

"Do your own judgment and taste, dear?" responded Nellie Arkwright sweetly, trying the effect of a bunch of white water-lilies with scarlet verbenas.

"I do your own taste, dear," mocked Danton Merrivale, his head cocked comically on one side, in imitation of the unconscious Nellie.

"Observe that dude!" exclaimed saucy Kitty Frazer, pointing one dainty finger at the dauntless Merrivale. "Boys, why don't you put him out? He is a disgrace to our society."

"Oh, for the superior sense and wisdom of our fair ladies," exclaimed Sally Norton, a week's rioutsness distiguating her bright, merry face.

"Well, I never!" ecorted young Newman, with superior forethought. "If to-morrow are isn't Halloween, and preparations and begun. Why don't you work faster, girls?"

"Why don't you per-uit that wonderful doll watch to rest in your pocket for one moment, and use your hands at something useful? It will do you no harm, Mr. Newman emphasizing the title, to be as useful as you have been hitherto ornamental." And Kitty Frazer dear sized her bulb branch tragi ally.

"Will it take a ten ot ays ation to tran that one half?" quizzically injured Bob Merrivale, brother to Danton.

"We wish to be super especially nice for this particular occasion; for you know that is the place that we are to fix all of our tricks," explained Lucy Grey, brightly.

Their gay sallies were interrupted by the entrance of a newcomer in their midst; the merry blue eyes and constant good-humor wh li characten ed him made him a mave sal favorite among them all.

The young ladies all arose, with the ex ception of one, with one accord, and an eyeful at once burs ng in a chorus of greet ngs.

"Oh, what lovely conspiracy!" "Do let me join!" "Who ever did you get so handsome?" "I bet I'll see no one to-night worth looking at!" "Will you now, Ralph?" The tone of poverty and love dwelling beneath the same roof is all

One figure sat as before—silent and motionless, except when one slender hand was lowered to capture a required branch or flower.

The last comer slowly wended his way thither, and, bending one knee, silently placed a beautiful bud just opposite among the glossy, jet curls. Then, arising, the yellow and black hair for one minute mingled, as he fondly whispered:

"Darling, wear one to-morrow eve at the doings, if you accept my offering —my heart."

A vivid blush, for a moment only, stained the fair cheek of the lovely Lucella, then vanished, leaving her face as pale as before.

Envious whisperings now went the rounds among the fair ones, while significant glances sped from eye to eye.

"How can he admire that dusky thing?" asked a faded blonde, whose gone at ancholy was artificial.

"Indeed, I cannot imagine!" replied pug-nosed Belle Irvine, with a coquettish toss of her low head.

"Some people do have such queer tastes," remarked Kitty Frazer, exhibiting a becoming pout.

"The amount of the matter is, Gil," Bob Merrivale wickedly remarked, "each and every one of those worthy young ladies over here is inclined to be very much offended that you do not style whisper something nonsensical in their delicate sea-shells—vulgarly termed ears."

"Thank you, Bob Merrvale!" "How dare you?" "You bad, bad boy!" and many similar pouting expressions followed the daring speech.

As the proposal was now made, and ac pinioned in by all, to repair to the hall to hang their tasteful wreaths and garlands, the chatter for a time ceased.

PART II.

Among the tombs wending banks
Where Dean runs, rippling clear,
Where Bruce once ruled the martial ranks,
And shook his curtick-sword,
Some merry, friendly country folk
Together did convene,
To dance in the merry moonlight mirth-sticks,
And hold their Hallowe'en.
Full blithe that night.
Burns.

The festival was at its height. Lads and lasses all had thrown grim care to the winds; all were blithe and gay. Tricks were all the sport.

Cabbage had been pulled, until timid Luella began to expatiate on the propriety of safety of escutiming in that branch longer, as the garden was her father's pride.

Burning nuts next crossed, until when near the close of this, she was well assured that the one designated Gilbert Ainsley was not to leave the side of the one named Luella, then she turned her back upon them for fear of being detected watching them.

Then lots were cast to determine which of the ladies present should proceed to the barn, a quarter of a mile away, and throw into the pot a ball of the old cow, and toward the latter end, when the expected something held the thread demand. "Who holds?" their answer would come from the kin-pot, by naming the Christian and surname of her future husband.

The lot fell upon Kitty Frazer, who, with a rapidly beating heart, left the company for the kiln. While she was absent, the game of going alone to a looking glass was artificial.

"Indeed, I cannot imagine!" replied pug-nosed Belle Irvine, with a coquettish toss of her low head.

"Some people do have such queer tastes," remarked Kitty Frazer, exhibiting a becoming pout.

The national convention of the W. C. T. U. recently held at St. Louis, Mo., is said to have been one of the grandest meetings ever held in that city. A full report was given in The Union Signal of Oct. 30, from which selections will be read at the next meeting of the Charlevoix union.

Ladies of the W. C. T. U., we have reason to feel proud and encouraged over the prohibition vote cast in Michigan this fall. There were 14,000 votes cast for St. John and Preston, a gain of 9,000 votes in two years, and in this county a gain of 50 votes. Let us band ourselves together as christian women to work with more zeal and courage than ever before, for "God and home and native land." It was women who started this noble work, and it must be women to carry it through. We shall have to suffer persecutions, yes, even insults, but with God on our side we shall win. Ladies and mothers, you who stay at home and find excuses for not working, can claim no glory in this victory that is sure to be ours ere long.

The general manager of the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway has promulgated a circular addressed to agents, operators, switchmen and trainmen, in which, calling attention to the many recent train casualties, he cautions them to obey to the letter the rules, regulations and special orders that are issued for safe working. Among other things the circular says: "Impress upon every one the necessity of making safety the first consideration at all times. Accept no chances and never act on supposition. Have no man on your staff, either at stations, switches, or on trains, who indulge in drink. Men in railway service who are addicted to tippling cannot be depended upon." Chicago Journal.

Enlisted for the War.

The battle for "God and home and native land," which the prohibitionists of Michigan flatter themselves they have been waging, has not settled the matters at issue to their perfect satisfaction. They decline to acknowledge their overthrow and declare that they will not run from the field of action. They have experienced a repulse, but they are not covered with confusion, neither are they as men without hope. They hold the battle of 1884 to have been but one of many that they have engaged to fight. They have enlisted for a war—a war of many battles, of more than one campaign. They say they will not quit fighting until they win a positive and permanent success not until God's will in regard to the liquor traffic is done and home and native land are saved from the assaults of the "destroyer."

This attitude of the prohibitionists is plucky and quite consistent with their preliminary pledges. They resented the accusation that they were making a fight merely against Alger in behalf of Preston or against Blaine in favor of St. John. They declared to be fighting not for any man, or against any man; but rather for a great moral reform and against a great agency of evil. The only way to prove the sincerity of these assertions is to keep up the fight, regardless of the collateral and indirect effect on Blaine and Alger of their first attack on rum. To stop the fighting now would be tantamount to a confession that they have been waging merely a warfare against certain men.

What is one of the prohibitionists of Michigan—a man of the greatest influence of all the other states. They all must continue in the service of reform, or be in the end guilty of having deserted the public cause to meet success in the contest which closed Tuesday.—Detroit Tribune.

HOTEL LIFE.

Becoming Yearly More Popular Among Those Who Can Afford It.

"So you think hotel life is gaining in popularity?" ventured a Journal reporter to Mr. Welch, of the St. Nicholas. The conversation had turned on hotels, their conveniences, the guests, and the strange sights hotel men see.

"Yes, sir; for those who can afford the comfort and conveniences of hotel life it is growing more popular year by year. In a well-appointed, first-class hotel people can live undisturbed by the various ills that housekeeping is heir to, and the time will come when half the well-to-do people of the city will inhabit its first-class hotels."

"And if you were asked the cause of the growing popularity what would you say?"

"I would give two reasons prominent among the many that I might name. The richer class of people, who divide their time among the south in winter and the northern watering-places in summer, varied with an occasional trip to Europe, find that their comings and goings can be done with much less discomfort and less expense by living in a hotel than if they were maintaining an establishment of their own. With such people comfort and convenience, the avoidance of unnecessary bother and aggravating delay, enter more into their calculation than does expense."

"You mention two reasons?"

"The other is that the male members of families living in hotels are generally men in active business pursuits, only home at meal-times and in the evenings. They do not wish to have their wives burdened with the innumerable cares of a household, the trouble and vexation of servants, and the exactions of the family execs generally. To such a separate establishment, as rents go now, is more expensive and less comfortable. Taking rent, the cost of fine furniture, and the expense of a corps of servants, there is no comparison between the two modes of living."

"Yes, but that class of guests must be very exacting in their demands at a hotel."

"There's where you and probably others make a great mistake. Of all the people who use hotels they are the least troublesome and exacting. In fact, they are the easiest to please. They are accustomed to good living, a well-served table, finely furnished rooms, obedient and obliging servants, and when they find all these at their command this is all they ask. They know just what the service of a first-class hotel is; they know that there is somebody always ready to satisfy their least want and that every convenience of the house is at their disposal. Oh, no, we never have trouble with them."

"Then are the people that do give trouble?"

"Well, probably the most troublesome are people from the country unused to stopping at hotels. They have an exaggerated idea of their own importance, and think that everybody about the house must dance attendance on them. They seem bent on giving all the trouble they can, and make themselves and others uncomfortable. But should they stay at the hotels a month or so, it's wonderful to note the change that takes place. They soon find out that their comfort and convenience are the two things most thought of by the proprietor, and they fall right into the groove and find that they have simply to go on living and be happy."

"Is there not some danger that the increasing popularity of the fashionable flats will result injuriously to the hotels?"

"I think not. In the first place, the expense of living in these stylish apartment-houses is much greater. In the best of them suits for a family range from $2,000 to $10,000 a year, and this means the bare walls—no furniture and no meals. Still, they are growing more popular every day, and, as the best hotels are losing some of their wealthy guests, I can only surmise that the number of people able to live in these houses and in hotels in the city is receiving constant accessions."

"Do people marry from their hotel?"

"Why, certainly; that's one of the natural consequences of hotel life. And how much pleasanter it is! The groom has but to give a single order to the proprietor specifying just what is wanted, and an army of servants are ready to carry out the arrangements without a hitch. Hotel weddings are getting to be common if fast—so much so that I know of two to come off this fall where the parties have their own houses, but, preferring the thorough system of a hotel, have given me their orders."—*N. Character in Gait.

It is well to beware of the man who carries his left foot in toward his right in walking, giving the impression that his right foot turns out and his left turns in. This man is a natural petty larcenist. He may perhaps have never stolen in his life, but that was because of fear, or lack of opportunity, but all the same he is liable at any time to acquaint unconsidered trifles for pure wantonness. He is of a kleptomaniac nature; but he is not nearly so dangerous as the man who deliberately lifts his leg up from the stairs after he has gone up-stairs. That man is a natural and an educated villain. In England, where the treadmill is used in prisons, many convicts acquire that peculiar step, but it is the natural, careful, catlike tread of the criminal. The girl who walks with a flat foot planted squarely on the ground, as though she wanted it to grow there, may not be as attractive as the girl with the arched instep, but she is a good deal better-natured. She is sure to be a good nurse, kind hearted, sympathetic, anxious to bear the burdens of others, while the girl with the arched foot is nearly sure to be selfish, and certain to be a coquette if she walks on her toes.

The man of short, nervous steps is always a business man of energy, but if the stride is from the knee only, he is cold and selfish, caring for no one but himself. The man whose stride is long and at the same time energetic, is generally bright, always erratic and ill-balanced, often conceited, always careless, fond of admiration, generally willing to sacrifice much for praise and calm, and, while often a good fellow, generally unreliable. The diplomat and the financier have a smooth, gliding walk, hard to describe, but easy to recognize. There is nothing sneaking about it, but it betokens careful deliberation, as though every step were duly considered before being made. Great statesmen and great philanthropists always have a loose, shambling gait, which comes from thinking about others more than about themselves. The strut of the vain man, the teetering trip of the "dude," the lounging gait of the unemployed club man, are all too familiar to call for description. To say that a person walks like a lady or like a gentleman is high praise. The gait can never be picked up in after life, it must be born in a man or woman, and cultivated in early youth. It is lost to a man when he falls into bad ways, for so surely as he loses his consciousness of rectitude and pride of honor, so surely will he pick up the gait of the loafer. An honest man, gentle or simple, never walks like a thief, and a thief can never counterfeit the gait of an honest man, but in attempting to apply these rules to men, one knows it must be remembered that all thieves are not caught, and all suspected persons are not bad.—Ada California.

A Headdress of Sponge.

Did I not tell you some time ago, when I was writing up mushrooms in satin, that if you waited long enough I would find something lower still than that vegetation to decorate your heads with? and lo! the useful sponge turns up just in the nick of time, as a fashion caprice, when the world seemed to have yielded up its last-to-be-thought-of ornament in the shape of fungi.

It's quite funny, as Lou Harrison would say, "very, very funny," this idea of wearing on your head the same thing with which you wash your head; but still the sponge as a novelty is immense—would it be more immense should the wearer of the same be caught in a shower.

As it is, the sponge is cut flat, and decorated with loops of gold thread stuck into the holes, as it would be, it would swell up under that shower, making the head appear as a cabbage, the golden loops retiring as animals curl within their soft cases. Oh! I would give—well, all I have in my purse—a new nickel to see the courageous woman who would go out in a rainstorm with a sponge on the top of her pate. Nevertheless, being in mode, you can make up a sponge chapeau awfully cheap. For example, I see old men carrying baskets full of the commonest kind along the streets. These are perfectly worthless as washers, but for capots—oh no! Think of it! You can beat down the man, who asks ten cents apiece, into giving you two for fifteen cents; four lots north of gold thread, judiciously glued in loops into each hole; a yard or two of mock lace, mounted up with a little gold bronze, and you have a bonnet fit for anyone. Even Langtry might be proud of the latest novelty.

Curiosity of Meal Life.

An English paper gives some of the curiosities of medical life. It is the duty of one doctor to take lunch every day at a great castle belonging to a noble lord. The household is immense, and there is just the chance that there may be some case of indisposition demanding attention. He gets some of the best company and best lunches in England, and only charges a guinea for each attendance. There is a wealthy man near a great city who cannot bear to be left for the night. There is a physician of great ability who drives out of town nightly to sleep at his residence; he is consequently debarred evening society, and if he goes out to dinner has to leave his friends before wine. He has to charge his patient £1,000 a year. One young doctor has a standing engagement of £200 a year to look after the health of an old lady. She had to be inspected three times a day, was strong as a horse, and so selfish and perverse that he had great trouble with her.—Troy Times.

Canvassing the Official Vote in New York.

The excitement in New York over the close political contest in that State has not had a paralyzing influence on the result of the election, as spread, to a more or less extent, all over the country. The canvass of election at this writing Tuesday morning may be summed up as follows: While the returns by counties from the whole State give Cleveland a majority of from 1,200 to 1,400, the New York Tribune and the Republican National Committee claim that there have been returns illegally thrown in claiming the State for Blaine. They also charge that Democratic frauds have been committed which will vitiate the returns from several counties. An Albany dispatch says: The Clerks of every county in the State have sent in their returns, and the total shows Cleveland's plurality to be 1,240." The National Republican Committee issued an address stating that every effort was being made to ascertain if there were any errors in New York returns and saying that if there is not the election of Mr. Cleveland will be by fraud consummated in. The New York Democratic Executive Committee issued an address to the country claiming that the Republicans were resorting to forgery in order to secure the State from the Democracy. It Cleveland is not elected. Democrats in the country, at the suggestion of Chairman Barnum, held meetings to ratify and endorse the election of Cleveland on Saturday night. In every city and town of any size in the Republican States were the order. Canvassing boards, as we have set off, and there was a general rejoicing by the "unterrified."

A dispatch from New York City, earlier on the morning of the 12th inst., gives the following resume of the official canvass of the votes of the twenty-four boards in the State up to that hour:

"As to the final result of the battle for Presidential electors as to be decided in thirty-three of the sixty counties of this State. The last previous report of Penny Clerks showed a Democratic plurality of 1,240. Twenty-four canvass showed a net loss to Blaine of four votes. The remaining twenty-seven counties, with two exceptions, reported progress, and will, for the most part, report the result as the canvass to-morrow. To-day reports speak of five counties in form. No mention is made of any serious discrepancy in the count. The several counties which did not have to commence their official canvass reported that no work was to be done that day, when completed the figures would show any change from those already given.

"The canvassed returns received so far from certain State Committees from twenty-four counties indicated a slight loss in Harrison in favor of Blaine, and a loss in Jackson in favor of Cleveland. An official statement from the Democratic Executive Committee, at the Windsor Hotel, and from the Republican State Executive Committee, at the Fifth Avenue, could not be obtained.

"Gen. John X. Knapp, stalwart Republican from Albion, and the brains of the 'visiting statesmen' who went to Albany, said: 'I don't see that there will be any material change in the published returns. If there is any, little, and so, I will be in New York and Kings Counties. The figures in counties coming from the rural districts will be changed very little, and not enough to affect the apparent gain for Cleveland that was reported on the face of the returns. Democrats in the city and Kings County will be in a position to know the exact figures in the eight counties that may still come to them after the official canvass is completed. I am not prepared to say that there will be any change in New York city and Kings County.'

"The total light is expected to be made in this city. The last number of votes cast for Governor Gilroy is reported to be 1,240. Reports from the country districts will be received by the Democratic Committee to-day, and the figures will be announced by evening. It is said that the Republicans have been resolved from all their counties, and that the official count is not likely to vary from the figures published in the papers. The delay in making the footings in the counties named is caused by the fact that Democrats have made the reports in legal form. The canvass of the counties is slow, and only small changes from the reported figures in the eight counties that may still come to the city are looked upon as affecting the apparent gain for Cleveland that was reported. The official count will begin Tuesday, and put his plurality back to 1,200. The certificate from these counties will be made and canvassed by 4 o'clock in New York and Albany.

SOUTHERN.

A butler explosion in Mead's sugar house at New Orleans caused the death of nine persons, while six were wounded, some of them dangerously. The killed are: Edwin Eden, engineer; W. Booker, John Jones, Henry Nash, Joseph Richards, Paul Richards, James Sires, William Wilson, Henry Russelin.

The vote in Louisiana gives 42,284 to 42,221 for the wounded are August Eantz, Ernst Eantz, E. Bantz, and John Pricke, dangerously wounded; John Dolard and John Mccabe, slightly. The boiler was bought second-hand twenty years ago. It had no water in the time, and, cold water being let in, an explosion followed. President Arthur has issued the following Thanksgiving proclamation:

"The season is nigh when it is the yearly wont of this people to observe a day to be named for this purpose by the President as his especial exertion for thanksgiving unto God. Now, therefore, in recognition of this laudable custom, I, Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, do hereby designate as such day of prayer and thanksgiving Thursday, the 27th of this present November; and I do recommend that throughout the land the people, meeting in their several places of worship, do then keep holiday at their several homes and their several places of worship, and with heart and voice pay to Almighty God acknowledgment in the time of all good for the countless blessings wherewith He has visited this nation."

Settled.

The official canvass of New York has been completed, and Cleveland's plurality is 1,107, taking his lowest vote on any elector against Blaine's highest.

"How it will Effect the Times."

The Muncelona Herald like many other republican papers predicts dire ful results to follow the election of Cleveland and says that "if Cleveland is elected, and the democrats get a majority in the senate, the inhabitants of our thriving village will see far harder times during the coming winter than they have ever before experienced." Does the editor claim that hard times this coming winter will result from democratic government? Does not the editor know that Cleveland will not be inaugurated till next March, and the congress elected November 4th, will not hold a regular session till one year from next December. Then why will the times be my harder this winter than they were last under the same government? A succeeding paragraph in the same article explains it, and shows that the republican party managers and friends propose to make times just as hard as they can. Read this: "As soon as dispatches were received announcing the probable election of the democratic nominees, John Otis & Co., owners of the Muncelona iron furnace, immediately counter manded an order for six hundred carloads of ore. The above named firm informs us that they only have ore and wood sufficient to run them until the first of January, when they will blow out their stack and wait for further developments." This is what will make times hard. This is the principle that would ruin a common workman if they cannot rule. If the republican party controlled all the machinery of the country the party managers would order an entire suspension of business for the purpose of starving laboring men into submission.

What Ails Business.

Relative to the business situation one thing is reasonably certain. What ever uneasiness or depression there may be at this time which did not exist a month ago is due to the refusal of certain conspirators in New York to abide by the result of the recent election.

If Jones, Elkins, Blaine and others had promptly admitted the fact that on the face of returns Governor Cleveland had a plurality, their demand for the official count would have caused no uneasiness, but they did nothing of the kind. They persistently misrepresented the figures as long as that was possible, and then they abandoned the returns entirely and resorted to "claims" which had no basis of fact. Their conduct was such as to give rise to the suspicion that they were manipulating the returns, and hoped in some way to gain by stealth that which everybody knew they had not secured in open day.

All the distrust occasioned by the present extraordinary situation in politics is due to this one cause and not, as has been alleged in partisan quarters, to the election of Governor Cleveland.—Chicago Herald.

Business Enterprise.

The following special telegram to the Chicago Times from Gaboia, Ill., shows that all important business is not frightened to death because of Cleveland's election. "The Chicago and North Wisconsin railroad company have commenced grading their road at Savanna, Ill., and are rapidly working this way. The force employed is a large one, and it is thought that the work will be finished to the junction, six miles from Gaboia, by the first of January. This is the company that is supposed to be fostered by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, as far as Wisconsin. Also, the Northern road, now being constructed from Gaboia to Lake City, Minnesota."

A special to the Detroit Free Press from Grand Rapids, Nov 12th, says: "The Detroit, Lansing & Northern railroad and the Ottawa county railroad are the only railroads which have the prospective new admiration upon them. In all of these [illegible] works has been a great inconvenience to Brighton for a year past."

Notes and News.

That mule must have kicked terrible high, from the apparent effect.

How do our prohibition friends like the classification given them in the Sentinel last week?

"Jim" has furnished a fine dish of "crow" for those editors so much interested in his record before election.

Prohibitionists certainly have reason to hope for as good work from a fusion legislature as they have from a party of broken pledges.

That "notorious libertine" may yet succeed in unearthing some of the most disgusting rottenness with which this government was ever cursed.

Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana, said in a speech at Indianapolis, the other night, that government securities have advanced in price as a result of Cleveland's election.

That "national tragedy" may turn out a national blessing by ridding the government of a lot of worthless leeches who have lived and fatted on public patronage, and have little knowledge or care how anyone else exists.

If the prohibitionists of the state of New York (and other states) were not more devoted to principle than some of their would be managers, they probably would drink their barrel of whiskey, and without much compunction either.

Before the editor of the Sentinel again refers to "one door short," or indulges in similar insulting epithets, let him read the eighth chapter of John, third to eleventh verses, and apply the same to himself on general principles.

Instead of denouncing the majority the minority would do well to see conduct themselves that they may have some claim for consideration from the victors in the contest. This is a free for all race, and it is only fair that the rewards go around a little.

The Traverse Herald rejoices that the prohibitionists have unloaded themselves from republican shoulders and says that "The republicans won't have to bother themselves with that prohibition amendment business next winter, thanks to prohibitionists themselves."

"Justice travels with a leaden heel but strikes with an iron hand. Wait till the final gate is lifted, and a full head of water comes rushing on. Wait and you will see fine grinding thus." Jeremiah Black before the Electoral Commission. N. B.—The time predicted by Mr. Black has arrived.

Do not be surprised if the telegraph announces a destructive fire in any of the departments at Washington before next March, entailing the loss of valuable records. All evidence of crookedness must be put out of sight before the new administration gets hold of the books. This has been done in the past, and no doubt will be again.

Democrats, a few months hence you will be asked to subscribe your name to a paper recommending a continuance of the present local administration of the postoffice. Before you put your names to such a paper, read carefully the Charlevoix Sentinel of November 12th, then ask yourself if the editor deserves any consideration at your hands. He has grossly insulted every man who voted anything but the straight republican ticket. He has forfeited all claim for your consideration.

Wm. H. Barker, assistant secretary of the New York republican state committee, assigns Blaine's defeat wholly to the prohibition vote, and says: "You can imagine that now I have no personal love for the prohibitionists. I have hitherto put my hand in my pocket and contributed my mite in behalf of the temperance movement. The other day a collection was taken in my church in behalf of temperance. I refused to contribute. When asked my reason I replied that the prohibitionists had done all in their power to defeat the only party from which they had any show of reformation, and hereafter I intend I can so far as I was concerned, they could dispense with my help." Detroit Free Press. Is it not a fact that those republicans who have generally been so radical and loud-mouthed in their support of the prohibition party have at the same time been really in favor of "free lager?" Have not their professions been made to catch prohibition votes, and their work ever and always in the interest of "free lager" and also to catch votes? The record of the g. o. p. in Michigan is of that color.

"The rebels have at last taken Washington."—Charlevoix Sentinel. Yes, and now the nation is hanging breathless in the agony of suspense in the expectation that some red-handed rebel like Nelson Ainslie, some mure-constructed confederate like J. Milo Enton, or some blood thirsty secesh like L. D. Bartholomew, will take the Charlevoix postoffice, and, deprived of the assistance of the postmaster editor of the Sentinel, the government will go down in anarchy and ruin, while the light of our present civilization will be snuffed out, and the gloom of the dark ages will again envelop the land!—Harbor Springs Independent.

The abuse heaped upon prohibitionists by the republican press of Michigan is not conducive to a fraternity of feeling. It proves, among other things that republican solicitude for prohibition receives only for votes, and not for works. The republican party came into power by its strict adherence to a principle. The prohibition party can hope to fulfill its mission only by strict adherence to principle. When it ceases to truckle to the republican managers, as a sort of side show, it will find plenty of good democratic voters ready to stand up and be counted. There are plenty of good democrats praying for prohibition, but who cannot consistently vote to sustain a party which repealed the prohibitory law made by democrats, and who have violated every pledge it ever made tending toward the suppression of the liquor traffic. It looks now as if the mask thrown off would make plenty of prohibition votes before another election.

We do not believe, and doubt if the editor of the Petoskey Record himself believes what he charged last week to the democratic party, that the election of Cleveland "will reverse the whole financial policy of this government for four years to come, place the late confederacy in absolute control of the nation; make the confederate soldier an equal claimant on the bounty of the nation with the union soldier; give a money value to confederate war bonds, place in power a party committed against temperance legislation by every utterance of their national conventions for fifty years past" etc. etc. Are the men who fought for a principle now ready to undo the work of that great struggle? Are they not too much interested to forfeit their possessions and go back to the systems and circumstances of 25 years ago? The democracy of today is not the democracy of ante-war times any more than the republican party is the old whig party. The democratic party is as much a new party, and as much committed to progress and reform as any party can be with a new name. It is no more likely to commit such a grevious error than the "people's," or "union," or any other dear party in opposition to the old republicans.

A letter from a republican friend this week, touching politics and the elections, with other matters, contains the following: "If the tariff is to be tampered with, I must sincerely wish that they will make a clean sweep of it—no half-way measures, please. I think I can stand four years nipping, pinching, patching, and rags as well as any other toiling man, especially for the lesson it would learn all parties. Now go in like good fellows, and let us have all kinds of cheap goods from Europe." This is what all republicans wish. They are hoping and praying that the democratic party will overstep all right and reason and slaughter the government at a single blow, that they may the better come into power again four years hence. While it can be satisfactorily shown that a greater freedom of commerce will benefit our commonwealth, the democratic party itself is not agreed on the limit of that freedom. The absolute free trade wing of the party is in a minority, and while that is so there will be no "clean sweeps." Reform is desired. Revolution is not reform; a "clean sweep" is revolution. The sentiment of the masses is growing more and more favorable to a reduction of tariff taxation, but there are too many conservative men to permit such a revolution as the removal of all duties in a single administration. Such reforms must always come slowly—only so fast as the masses of people can understand, and adjust themselves to the newer systems. So long as this conservative element maintains the balance of power in the party, our republican friends may continue to hope and pray, in vain, for some outburst of democratic folly.

How to Furnish Bedrooms.

Bedrooms are more luxurious than ever in the modern American houses, and this is altogether the wrong place for luxurious or sumptuous furnishing. A bedroom should have no little furniture as possible beyond what is absolutely essential. No draperies which can hold the dust, no stuffed furniture, and no carpets other than soft rugs for the feet. Every bedroom can be furnished much in this way, and are only need as sleeping apartments. A boudoir [illegible] of the chamber may be as luxurious and tempting as possible, but the bedchamber should not be a lounging place or the like in the seconds. An English brass bedstead is always a most admirable piece of furniture for a bedroom, since it combines cleanliness and durability. These bedsteads are not costly in the end, and are easily kept bright. An open grate in a bedroom should be in every chamber in the house. The floor should be of hard wood, with a smooth surface, or, if it pine, it should be painted or shellacked and varnished. There should be no mungings over the bed or at the windows. If the bedroom is to be attractive, its attractiveness should be in its simplicity and extreme cleanliness. There are other rooms in which it is possible to exhibit as much grace and taste as meditation dilemmes, but the nursery and bedrooms should have no pretensions aside from healthiness and comfort.—Hints.

POOR TIRED MOTHER.

BY MARGARET ETTINGE.

They were talking of the glory of the land beyond the skies,
Of the light and of the gladness to be found in Paradise,
Of the flowers ever blooming, of the never-ceasing song,
Of the wond'rings through the golden streets of Jesus' white-robed throngs;
And sad father, leaning coolly back in his easy chair,
(Father always was a master hand for comfort everywhere)
"What a joyful thing 'twould be to know that when this life is over,
One would stand there near a welcome from the blessed shining shore!"
And Isabelle, our eldest girl, glanced upward from the rest
She was painting on a water-jug, and murmured, "Yes, indeed!"
And Marion, the next in age, a moment dropped her book,
And a "Yes, indeed!" responded, with a most ecstatic look.

But mother, gray-haired mother, who had come to sweep the room,
With a patient smile on her thin face, leaned slightly on her broom—
Some one else once thought how much she had to do—
And said, "I hope it is not wrong to agree with you.
But songs to me that wont I die, before I join the blest,
I'd like just for a little while to lie in my grave and rest."

A DYING CONFESSION.

BY LILY M. CURRY.

There was no color in the outer world that day—no vivid color. The leaves, which lingered still upon the trees, were languid and saffron-lined from the lasting drought. The sky was clouded over and the atmosphere chilled with the whisper of approaching rain.

I had been thinking hard about my trouble. Long before dawn I had wakened from horrible dreams of Mignon—dreams that she was false; long before dawn I had tossed from side to side upon my bed, and felt my eyeballs burning and my heart beating madly. I had tried them, desperately, to compose myself, to master my emotions; but I could not, for always as I closed my eyes, she came before me, brilliant and beautiful, taunting and terrible. She came and crazed me with her superb glance, her scornful lips. As I lay waiting for the dawn, I reviewed the past. My thoughts traveled swiftly back to the day of our marriage, half a year before. Since then what wretched fears, what helpless terror had come to be my portion! In making her my wife, I had hoped to make her heart mine own forever; and now it seemed to me that she could laugh to scorn my very ideal love.

When daylight came at last, I arose and sass myself within the mirror—a ghastly, haggard, miserable creature. And suddenly I felt that she had wrecked my body and my soul. I said to myself that this should last no longer; that I would know the worst and abide by the knowledge.

She would return that day; she had been two nights absent, on a visit to friends of hers whom yet I had not seen, in the country. At least this was the story she had told me. I had not sought for proof or disproof of her words. I had not dared to seek for it.

She would not arrive until evening; and the day yawned before me like a terrible chasm. I wanted neither food nor drink, but wandered aimlessly about our apartments—our home, which might have been a little paradise, for above the ebb and flow of the stormy town. Our home, which I had cared to make so dainty she might love me for the task. Alas!

There was no color in the outer world, but ever in the space where I walked singly to and fro, the dames of purgatory danced before my sight.

I could not cease from thinking of her, now that I had found that letter among her private papers—found it in my fierce, scornful search for proof. A letter from a former lover.

I read it many times that morning; it was brief, yet full of meaning.

"I love you; I am wretched when away from you. I cannot rest until we meet again."

That was how it read.

It had no date.

I felt no compunctions at having searched her desk. Why had she been false to me? Had I not been faithful and kind and loving? Had I not cherished her according to my vow?

It was now a long time since I had first noticed certain peculiar little actions of hers—impatient tossings of the head, restive sighs, and curves of the lip, which seemed to say, "you weary me with your assiduousness, your jealous care. I have you no longer."

And then her latest mental complaint: "Why do you torment me so? Have I no individuality? For pity's sake, be rational."

Rational! With that petulant voice ringing in my ears!

I continued to wander about our rooms. All vices her face came before me—the face dear to my artist's eyes—beautifully shaped, faultless in coloring, having the classic features of Greece, and the marvelous eyes of Italy—eyes made fit to dizzy all men who should behold them. And all accented that face—the rings of dark brown hair that reddened in the sunlight.

As the day dragged wearily along, I thought of various methods by which to assume myself of what I must know or not. And so at length I framed my resolution.

I would not go to meet her at the station, but, instead, remain at home, concealed, that she might believe me gone. I would place a note upon the center table, so conspicuously she should be sure to see it on her return. This note would express my intention of leaving the city. Her eyes upon finding it would feed the victory.

Where to conceal myself?

Somewhere in the little parlor, where she would enter and discover my note.

I made a slow circuit of the room, inspecting carefully each separate article of furniture, and considering what, if any, shelter it might afford.

I started from the door leading into our bed-chamber, and passed leftward from the same.

First came Mignon's writing desk, a pretty little ebony affair, in which she treasured many things, as well I knew. Some old photographs were there, some faded flowers, some scraps of poetry clipped from magazines,—some letters. I had not replaced the note I had found. It still burned over my heart,—burned as it were a living coal.

I looked for some time at the desk; I saw things with wondrous distinctness. There was dust—minute particles of dust upon the ledges. I rubbed it off with my bare finger.

Next was the window. I pushed aside the Turcoman curtain and looked down upon the street. How dull and cold the whole world seemed! How empty! Before the window stood the little chair she often sat in; just a little willow rocker with a square of painted satin. My heart ached harder as I fancied her sitting there.

Past these stood her piano. Past this the music-rack, with all her songs upon it. Ah, me!

Next, standing diagonally across the corner of the room, the curious old clock that I had brought from my studio at her request. I put my hand upon the door, as if to open it. Then I stopped and wondered if one could not stand with ease behind the antique timepiece.

Then I passed on.

Between the windows on the third side of the room was the lounge upon which I had so often lain and heard her singing; in the twilight; sometimes she had come to sit beside me, and lay her small, soft hand upon my hair.

I turned another corner and came to the door, through which she must enter. Past this were chairs, and a little stand heaped with cabinet photographs, her own among the rest. A chiffonier with brica-brac in the fourth corner, and so I came again to the door of the hall. Here I paused. After a time I thought again of the old clock, and returned to examine its position.

I drew it on a little further and slipped in behind.

The room grew dusky; the afternoon was slipping away.

I walked up and down the room; up and down, up and down—thinking. I had not broken fast since the lifelong day. My mouth seemed parched, my tongue swollen. I felt the shadow of approaching calamity.

As it grew dark I went out to a florist's and bought a little bunch of flowers, carnations, with surrounding sprays of mignonette.

Coming back, I stopped and spoke to the janitor of the building, giving him a message for my wife, who must soon arrive.

I went up hurriedly after this, for there was no time to lose. I put the sweet and spicy blossoms in a tumbler of water, and placed the tumbler on the center-table, underneath the chandelier. I had a vague notion that the little offering might appear aimlessly cause it to yearn for me, who loved her so. I wrote my note hastily, telling her I had been called away, but would return to-morrow. I placed the note beside the flowers. I lit one jet of the gas above, and left it burning dimly.

It was time for her to come. I grew each moment more feverish and impatient. I felt, besides, I imagined from long fasting. I went back through the bed-chamber to the dressing-room for a morsel of bread. There was some fruit in a dish upon the table. I thought perhaps a taste of this might quell my thirst. I took an orange and hurried back to the parlor, slipping into my hiding-place behind the clock.

Why did she not come? It was past the time now, and I began to imagine all terrible things. I fancied that she had come, had met the janitor at the entrance, had received from him my message and taken advantage of my absence to return or send word to some lover. The thought fairly choked me. My throat was painfully parched.

I took out my large pocket-knife and began to cut the orange. My hands trembled constantly.

At length I heard footsteps. This was the worst torture I had endured it.

The gas burned dimly. The spicy fragrance of the flowers upon the table seemed to fill the room. I stood motionless, listening, for the sound of the latchkey. I still clutched the orange and the open pocket-knife.

I held my breath.

She entered alone, and let the door swing carelessly after her; it did not close entirely. She gazed immediately about, then advanced toward the table.

"Flowers!" I heard her say. "Carnations—mignonette!"

I saw her take my letter in one hand, while with the other she reached up to turn the gas higher. Her cheek-color was high, and she was not very tall, so that she did not reach it at the first effort. Her little form, so round and full, uplifted face seemed to draw me toward her. I longed to rush out and clasp her to my heart. Heavens! what demon held me back?

She balanced there on tiptoe.

"I wonder if he has come?" I heard her say. Then I heard something else—a sort sound, as if the wind had pushed ajar the door she had not fully closed.

She did not turn; she did not seem to hear; her slender fingers were upon the gas-jet, with surrounding sprays of mignonette.

What happened next was swift and strange—and all in silence. A man had stepped within the room, closing the door noiselessly, and darting forward, encircled her head with his hands, blinding her eyes ere she had seen him.

Something heavy dropped from his arm to the floor. But not a word was spoken.

She did not scream or struggle; it seemed to me there was a smile upon her lips, as if—she—knew—her—lover.

The gas went suddenly out.

Just for a second then I felt myself crouching like a wild beast. In that second I seemed to know an eternity of hell.

She was in her lover's arms, and I—I sprang out to where they stood.

"Fiend—devil!" I cried out, and struck at him with the knife, in the darkness.

I heard a low moan; something fell to the floor and some one crept to the door and groped for the latch.

Goal What was this? A terrible fear seized me. What had I done?

The door flashed open. I saw him fleeing from me down the lighted hall, and Mignon quivered at my feet.

I lit the gas; how, I know not. I closed the door. But when I looked upon her lying there, her white face froze my very heart's blood.

"Oh, God be merciful!" I tried to whisper.

I had a terrible fear of touching her. I was growing cold from head to foot. I clung to a chair for support.

Her eyes unclosed; she looked up and, seeing me, tried to smile. She moved her lips, but uttered no sound.

Then I saw her slowly drag herself toward my feet, until she could reach and clasp my knee.

"Oh, God!" I moaned, with frozen tongue.

She smiled at me, though her eyes were dimmed with death. Her lips parted for one soft, sighing syllable.

"Love——"

And she fell back and was still.

I knew that she was dead—that I had murdered her instead of the coward who had fled and left her to die. I could move now; all was over. My pretty wife, my Mignon, lay dead at my feet and I could move.

I dared not bend as yet to lift her. I saw the knife he had dropped. I stooped and lifted it—it was heavy. opened it with trembling hands and looked stupidly at the contents. Then I began to shriek aloud for aid, for all the world to come and know that she was murdered.

They came in at my wild cries; they lifted her tenderly, as I had had no strength to do. They took the sack from my hands—the sack of burglar's tools!

And still I shrieked.

The blood-stained knife was on the floor. They secured to think it had been his.

Mignon was dead. They laid her upon her bed, and combed her hands and set some camilies on the table.

I shared to look upon her now, she was so like what she had been. The paper-hanger's apprentice, who had been called, was one genius has invented 'noiseless violins for practice,' and they are already on sale." Stanly sweetly.

Won by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters over diseases are almost daily received by its proprietors. For over a third of a century it has kept the house of constant and grateful acknowledgments from those whom it has cured or protected from disease, from medical men who have watched its effects and adopted it, and from a host of other sources. A noticeable circumstance in this mass of testimony as to the thoroughness of its effects is observable. This point specially commends itself to the consideration of persons afflicted with obstinate forms of the maladies to which it is adapted, against when ordinary remedies have proved unavailing. Severe and ague, chronic constipation and dyspepsia, lung and increasing debility, confirmed biliousness, and rheumatism are among the forms of disease which most frequently defy medication, and in the eradication of these maladies the Bitters is specially suited. Rainbow Rocks of the Yellowstone.

From a natural platform at the very edge of the lower falls, the sight-seer can look 100 feet upward to the top of the heavily wooded banks, and down to the foot of the falls, 300 feet. It is not over forty feet from this natural platform to the other side of the river, and the volume of water compressed into this narrow space is enormous; but as soon as it passes it is transformed into snowy, flossy foam, and from below rises a thick mist as the water is hurled upon the rocks that break its fall. Looking up the falls through the Grand Canyon really gives to the scene its unrivaled charm. One may see purple, rose, yellow and green, and hundreds of other fantastic shapes, according as the rains of fancy are blessed. The colors of the rocks include almost the tint of the rainbow. Below this is a stratum of brown rock, gradually shading into red. Then come orange, yellow, violet and white limestone. Yonder is a bright, red tower, and beside it is a pillar of black, flint-stone. Below is a white cone, above a purple arc.—Correspondence Boston Times.

Temperance Reform.

WHAT HAS ALREADY BEEN ACCOMPLISHED —THE PROMISE OF THE FUTURE—THE POWER OF MORAL AND RELIGIOUS INFLUENCES.

No man who has lived forty or fifty years can fail, we think, to be impressed with the upward tendency of public sentiment with respect to temperance reform. Even those who are not total abstainers recognize the evil of the liquor traffic more clearly than in former years, and are glad to aid in suppressing its worst abuses. Our lawmakers are more ready to place restriction, of one kind or another, upon the business, and our judges are far less disposed to deal lieniently with offenders against restrictive laws. And this public sentiment is not, as has sometimes been the case, the outburst of temporary enthusiasm but a steady outgrowth of solid conviction.

To be sure, dismal statistics may be cited on the other side. The amount of liquor manufactured and consumed is far greater now than ever before. Never were there so many distilleries in operation, and the number of breweries has increased enormously. Stated in gallons or reduced to "drinks," the aggregate of liquor consumed is appalling. But it must not be forgotten that the population of the country has also enormously increased. It is hardly possible to grasp the idea of fifty-odd millions of people; but a moment's thought will show how vast a quantity of liquor even one fiftieth of that number can consume in a year. Thus, while it is true that the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors has greatly increased, it does not necessarily follow that the drinkers of intoxicating beverages bear the same proportion to the whole population as formerly. And when we consider that the swarms of emigrants constantly pressing in upon us consist largely of drinkers, we see where the enormous production of liquor is consumed.

Yet it would be sheer folly to ignore the tremendous power of the drinking habit as it still exists among us. The work to be done before the giant evil of intemperance is eradicated is measurably great. And the question forces itself upon every good citizen's attention: How can it best be done? Some, impatient of delay, would attempt to throttle the liquor traffic with an amendment to the national constitution. Others would seek the same end through state legislation, constitutional or statutory; while still others, distrusting the efficiency of the law to restrain men's appetites, look to moral and religious influences as assuring the largest and most permanent results in temperance reform. Whatever may be thought of other methods here at least all good people may be at one. The inculcation of total abstinence in our home family life, Sunday schools, from the pulpit, in the prayer meeting, and through special agencies devoted to temperance work, as well as by a consistent example, is a mode of advancing the reform in which every one may take a part. We have no disposition to oppose any earnest effort to further so beneficent a cause; but there is a choice of methods, and we see ground for special hope in the use of moral and religious agencies for persuading men to adopt strict temperance principles. The incalculable good that has been accomplished in the past by this means is the best possible proof of its value. In fact, we do not hesitate to affirm that for the cheering signs of progress in temperance reform of which we have spoken we are chiefly indebted to the quiet, patient, prayerful efforts of God-fearing men and women to reform the drinker and to make the drinking habit odious. Temperance legislation has had its part to play in the great work; but whatever efficiency it has had is due to the christian temperance sentiment behind it as a vivifying, sustaining force.—*N. Y. HER BUSY LIFE.

A Pen Portrait of the Late Frank Leslie's Attractive Widow.

A handsome woman sat before a big desk in a cozy office in Frank Leslie's publishing house, busily engaged overlooking bills, writing letters, and attending to the details of the immense business. It was Mrs. Frank Leslie. She arose gracefully and greeted the reporter cordially. Mrs. Leslie was plainly attired in a black dress with white trimmings. The only jewelry she wore consisted of a pair of neat pearl ear-drops. Her dark hair was tastefully arranged over her white forehead, and her large gray eyes sparkled with animation as she conversed.

"The public has been treated to so much of my private affairs," said Mrs. Leslie, "that I think it time to set people right. A few days ago a letter was published in a Chicago paper, and was extensively copied, giving what purported to be an account of my extravagant life at Long Branch. It stated that I had sixty-five different toilets while at the resort; that I drove five blooded horses upon the Concourse, and that my diamonds would fill a peck measure. The fact is that I was only at Long Branch for four days, and that was the only time that I had been away from my business this season. I only wore three different toilets while there, and those were very plain, being either black or white. The fact is I have not worn any colors since Mr. Leslie's death. I drove a team occasionally, but it was not a blooded one, and I never owned five horses. My diamonds were only worn as a proper time and place, and are not conspicuous gems. Then the papers stated that my hotel bill for the four days was $450, while in fact it was but $39.50. I would not notice such gross exaggerations as these were it not for the fact that my business may be injured by such reports. I attend strictly to business and superintend the whole work of this great establishment. I am at my desk from early in the morning until late in the afternoon, and I do not know any lady that works harder than I.

"I noticed in a paper the other day that I kept a French maid to constantly wait upon me. This is false also, as I never had a maid of any kind, having a firm faith in the proverb that 'God helps those that help themselves.' I have always been treated with great consideration by the press of the United States, with few exceptions, and I am heartily grateful for it. But I suppose these attacks originate in the malice of some persons, although I never knowingly wronged any one."

Mrs. Leslie sighed, and the New York Journal reporter remarked: "The Marquis de Neuville has not always been treated with consideration by the press?"

"Oh, dear, no," said Mrs. Leslie. "The fact is, there is an antipathy to foreigners among the majority of Americans. The Marquis cannot help it because he was born with a title. It was even said when my engagement to him was first announced that his title was not genuine, but I believe every one acknowledges now that it is. For my part, I would prefer that he had no title, but it cannot be helped. The Marquis is a thorough gentleman, and the newspaper flings at his manner and personal appearance are fabrications. I never saw him wear a colored neck-tie in the four years that I have known him, and he always dresses in the most simple manner. It has never been claimed that he does not pay his debts, and he is one of the most charitable of men. No man ever applied to the Marquis to relieve his distress and was refused."

"When does your marriage take place?"

"When that event takes place it will be as publicly announced as my engagement was," said Mrs. Leslie. "It is always painful to have one's private affairs brought before the public, but I believe they will appreciate the reasons which impel me to correct the false statements which have been put in circulation."

A Persian Spoon.

A sherbet spoon is from one to two feet in length; the bowl, cut from a solid block, holds from a claret glass to a tumbler of the liquid. This bowl is so thin as to be semi-transparent, and is frequently ornamented with an inscription, the letters of which are in high relief. To retain their semi-transparency, each letter is undercut, so that, although standing on an eighth of an inch from the surface of the bowl, yet the whole is of the same light and delicate texture, no part thicker than another. One-half of the surface of the spoon-bowl is covered by two cleverly applied pieces of curved wood, which appears to be carved from one block. But this is not the case—they are really excavated there. These pieces are carved in such a delicate manner as to be almost filmy in appearance, resembling lace-work.

The handle of the spoon—at times twenty inches long—is formed in a separate piece, and inserted into the edge of the bowl in a groove cut to receive it. This handle is also elaborately carved in delicate tracery, and a wonderful effect is produced by the rhomboidal-shaped handle, at times four inches broad at the widest part and only a tenth of an inch thick. The groove where the handle is inserted into the edge of the bowl of the spoon and the point of junction are hidden by a rosette of carved wood, circular in shape, only a tenth of an inch thick. This, too, is carved in lace-like work, and it is cemented to the shaft of the spoon. A kind of firing buttress of similar delicate wood-work unites the back part of the shaft to the shoulder of the bowl.

The spoon which, when it leaves the carver's bench, is white, is varnished with Kaman oil, which acts as waterproof and preservative, and dyes the whole of a fine gamboge yellow similar to our boxwood. The weight of the spoon is in the largest sizes two ounces. The tools used by the carver are a plane, a rough sort of gouge, and a common penknife. Each spoon is of a separate and original design, no two being alike, save when ordered in pairs or sets. The price of the finest specimens is from 5 shillings to 15 shillings each.

These sherbet spoons are really works of art, and are valued by Oriental amateurs. Many of the merchants are very proud of their sherbet spoons, and being wood, they are "lawful" for a metal spoon, if of silver, is an abomination; consequently, the teaspoons in Persia have a filigree hole in the bowl, and thus can be used for stirring the tea only, and not for the unlawful act of conveying it to the mouth in a silver spoon. Of course, these high-art sherbet spoons are only seen at the houses of the better classes, a coarser wooden spoon being used by the lower classes. The spoons at dinner serve as drinking vessels, for tumblers are unknown; and the metal drinking cups so much in use are merely for traveling, or the pottle-deep potations of the irreligious.—Chamber's Journal.

A Henpecked Turk.

To tell the truth, a Turk is as badly henpecked as could well be imagined. Too good old days when he could quietly strangle a refractory wife, and drop her into the Bosphorus to be buried at the State's expense, passed away a quarter of a century ago under the European spasm of virtue that established the "Joint control." Since then he has been too dejected to assert his power, and as a result the women do very much as they please. They stay in or go out, ramble about the thoroughfares alone, ride in the horse-cars or the caiques, gossip, study, read and frequent the baths much as if they had no lords and masters at all. But in point of fact there always has been a paradox in the rules of conduct laid down for Turkish women. The forced covering of their faces in the streets and the strictness in the lines of social intercourse throw a mystery around their treatment that has had much to do with making it seem severe. But on the other hand there is probably no nation in the world where the woman is so jealously guarded in her rights of life and property and so literally protected against her husband as in Turkey. It is considered quite the thing for a jealous Turk to go down to the old pier at Seraglio point and ruminate on his condition after the Marius-Carthage fashion. He doesn't expect to better his state thereby any more than to restore the half-submerged mascory to its original condition, but it is quieter there than it is at home, and he gets a melancholy satisfaction in the recollection of the number of faithless spouses who have met their punishment from its edge.

Sitka Jack's Potlatch.

Sitka Jack's house is a large square one fronting directly on the beach, and during his absence at Pyramid Harbor the square hearthstone in the middle is kept warm by the relatives he has left behind him. When this house was built, in 1877, it was warmed by a grand potlatch or feast and gift distribution that distanced all previous efforts of any rivals. An Alaska chief is considered rich in proportion as he gives away his possession, and Sitka Jack rose an hundred-fold in Siwash esteem when he gave his grand potlatch. All his relatives assisted in building the house, and this same community idea entitles them to live in it. Over 500 blankets were given away at his grand potlatch, and the dance was followed by a great feast, in which much whisky and native hoochinoo figured. Ben Holladay, Sr., with a large yachting party, was in the harbor at the time, and lent interest to the occasion by offering prizes for canoe races and adding a water carnival to the other festivities. Sitka Jack nearly bespoke himself by his great spread but his fame was settled on a substantial basis, and he has since had time to quietly recuperate. He has aged rapidly of late years, and now he delights to crouch by his fireside in winter evenings and relate the story of his great potlatch of seven years ago.

Red furniture in dull colors grows in favor almost daily, and faded rose and blue and olive pillow shams and curtain linings make a bed look like something quite different from the snowy couch of poetry, or from that later vision of the upholsterers, the bed with scarlet counterpane covered with lace. The new fashion is pretty and luxurious looking, and who can say that it is not fitting, in the days of Louis XV. chairs and costumes?

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

There was a glove fight at New York between Sullivan and Greenfield. In the second round both men were arrested, and later bailed. The match was an exhibition of scientific pugilism, and was awarded to Sullivan by the referee, principally because of the "crimehing" tactics of Greenfield, who, however, put in telling blows time and again up on his adversary's person.

The postoffice, six stores, and eleven houses at Patterson, Pa., valued at $30,000, were burned.

Julius Blank, of New York City, convicted of illegally registering before the late election, has been sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for eighteen months. Emil Meyer, alias Godfrey, who aided him, got two and a half years.

At Baltimore, Mr. Charles Leopold called upon Miss Hettie Winterbaum, offered his hand in marriage, and was accepted. For unknown reasons he then drew a pistol from his pocket. The weapon exploded while he was handling it, and the bullet fatally wounded Miss Winterbaum.

Forty coal miners, when arraigned at Washington, Pa., for interfering with non-union workmen, made no defense, and were each fined but one cent and costs.

A Grand Jury at New York indicted Sullivan and Greenfield for indulging in a prize-fight.

The Boston Base-Ball Association has been compelled to purchase the South End grounds at $100,000, to prevent them from being cut up into building lots.

Daniel Manning, Chairman of the New York Democratic State Committee, was married at Albany to Miss Mary Muzzarette Fryer. The public men of New York were well represented on the occasion, Gov. Cleveland being one of the throng. Mr. Manning and his bride immediately left for Europe.

A Cantonsenck (N. H.) dispatch says the effects of the drought are seriously felt in many parts of that State. In several places sickness, due chiefly to low water, has occurred, and seems to be increasing. Scarlet fever and diphtheria exist in various towns. In several instances the schools are closed on account of the sickness of the pupils.

WESTERN.

The explosion of a barrel containing resin and turpentine, at No. 102 Quincy street, Chicago, severely injured Adam and Russell Poole, James Fahey, Eddie and Maggie Burke, Anna Ward, and Stella Bassett, children living in the neighborhood. They were attempting to make a bonfire of the barrel, and some of them, it is thought, will die from their injuries.

The entire business portion of Hurley, Kan., was reduced to ashes, the loss being $10,000.

Arrangements have been concluded between Boston and Sessions for two billiard matches in Chicago in January.

Two tramps entered the house of a farmer named Danlon, at Hopkinton, Cook County, entered his wife to death, and fatally injured the farmer himself. Robbery was undoubtedly the miscreants' motive, but all they secured was $27. The murderer's description of their persons, no arrests have been or are likely to be made.

De Young had been one of the Stanford counsel, and came down hrom a visit to Governor Stanford's country residence at Vina, Tehama County, on the 17th inst. He had been in the office but a few minutes when he met Miss Stanford coming out of the business office. He spoke to her, and she replied. He then went into the office, and, finding no one there, walked into the private office of Mr. Crocker. Miss Stanford followed him in, and, producing a pistol, fired two shots at him. One of the shots struck De Young in the left breast, and the other in the left arm. De Young turned and grappled with Miss Stanford, and succeeded in wresting the pistol from her hand. He then threw it out of the window, and, staggering to the door, fell into the arms of a bystander. Miss Stanford was arrested, and is now in the City Prison awaiting examination.

SOUTHERN.

By the action of the Supreme Court of the United States, the decision of the Virginia Court of Appeals relieving the Mutual Assurance Society of Richmond from liability for loss by fire on certain Richmond property consumed at the time of the capture in 1865, on the ground that the fire was the result of "the invasion of a foreign enemy," is allowed to stand for want of jurisdiction on the part of the higher court. The decision of the highest court relieves the underwriters generally from liability for a great quantity of property destroyed by fire at Richmond when that city was evacuated by the Confederates.

POLITICAL.

James G. Blaine was serenaded at his home in Augusta, Me., by several hundred friends, and made a short address, thanking the Republicans of the country for their endorsement, and expressing the belief that the future will see a predominating power of the south in the incoming administration, saying that, while the Gulf States were given a relatively representation for all citizens of all races, still the negro's influence was suppressed, and the whites thereby wielded a double force, and virtually possessed two votes for the one enjoyed by the Northern citizen. Blaine had nothing but contempt for the Force bill proposition, and trusted that his administration would rest mainly for its interests of the nation.

A lasting dispatch says that official returns from all but five counties in Michigan, which are carefully estimated, give Republican majorities as follows: Blaine, 14,381; Ogle, for Governor, 9,230; balance of State ticket, 1,305. The Legislature is Republican on joint ballot by 64 majority.

President-elect Cleveland, in an interview with a staff correspondent of the Baltimore American, is represented as saying that in view of his small majority no one man or faction of men can claim to have elected him, and that he accordingly owes no one man more than he owes mother. He further informed the correspondent that he "expected to be pretty busy" at Washington; but, alluding to the current talk of a "clean sweep," remarked that he "wasn't much of a whipper."

At Chambersburg, Pa., Luther Cattle, over 100 years old, cast his twentieth Presidential vote. MISCELLANEOUS.

It is understood that a favorable understanding has been arrived at between Mr. Alexander Campbell, representing the Dominion of Canada, and the Hon. Mr. Mowat, Premier of Ontario, as to the best steps to be taken for expropriating all the territory on the Canada side of the Niagara River between Suspension Bridge and the streets and islands proposed to be set apart as the Canadian portion of the internat onal Park, and that the institution of the scheme will not be long delayed.

The strange disease reported as prevailing in Virginia also exists in Kentucky and West Virginia, where whole families have been swept away, and thirty or more new graves are seen in a small cemetery. The people call it cholera, for want of a better name, and the malady in boils the dreadful title, victims, upon being seized, seldom living longer than twenty-four hours. It is said the scourge affected majorities in some precincts at the recent election. Numerous corpses have been left unburied, and the bench from the decaying carcasses of animals pollutes the air. Flour, corn, and meal are reported to uncover the starving population, and, unless rain falls, annihilation may be anticipated.

At Dubuque, Iowa, Judge Utt, of the Circuit Court, rendered a decision, under the new prohibitory law, in favor of the liquor men. Nineteen saloon-keepers were sued by the Citizens' League, headed by J. J. Farley. They asked the court for an injunction to restrain the local criminal misdemeanors under the new law. Judge Utt sustains a demurrer of the defendants on the grounds that his court, being one of equity, has no jurisdiction over a criminal case, and on the general grounds that it is unconstitutional to deprive a man of his property. The decision is received with great interest, being regarded as a prohibition defeat. An appeal will be made

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

The Financial Outlook.

The fact that a considerable number of mills and factories have recently shut down has given the habitual croakers an opportunity to renew their gloomy prognostications as to the future. The scheme does not seem to work well, and in business circles there is apparently a disposition to take a more hopeful view of the general financial and commercial situation. It is well known that the temporary shutting down by manufacturers and the reduction in wages are both the result of past events rather than of any new developments in the business affairs of the country. Over-production of metals, coal, cotton manufactures, etc., etc., a few years since naturally brought about extremely low prices, and with a desire in all directions to curtail consumption to pressing wants, there has been more or less depression in all branches of trade. The movement looking towards reduced wages will not, it is confidently believed, cause any uprising of labor for the reason that the necessaries of life are now obtainable more cheaply than for many years. These concomitants of the situation will ultimately correct many evils, and will, in connection with other causes now appearing, assist in building up trade in various channels.

Since the election there has been a substantial improvement in the dry goods business and the distributive movement has increased materially. In this and in other branches there is an impression that bed rock prices have been touched, and that delay in making purchases may only result in having to pay higher figures. When this view becomes general there will be witnessed an improvement similar to that noticed in the department of dry goods. The success of the democratic party has already inspired confidence among the mercantile classes and the future is looked forward to with cheerfulness, it being believed that legislation will be so shaped as to bring lasting benefits to the business interests. The recent utterances of President-elect Cleveland and Mr. Hendricks are calculated to stimulate this feeling of confidence, and the subpart fresh courage to those about to embark in new enterprises. The outlook is certainly more favorable and the shutting down of mills in consequence of troubles dating back several years will soon give place to a more healthy and satisfactory condition of affairs.—New York World.

"The Coming Great Change."

Under the above caption, Mr. J. S. Moore writes at length in the New York Times of Nov. 16th, discussing the election of Grover Cleveland, and the probable influence it will have on the government, on the tariff, and on business generally. We make a brief extract.

Yes: the boss power is at last broken, and it will indeed be strange if the breaking suffices do not benefit by the change. The money power has also received a wholesome check, and the will of the people has triumphed. There is nothing more benevolent in a country like America, whose greatness and prosperity rest largely on capital, than the power of wealth properly exercised. But when immense wealth is concentrated in a few hands, and its great influence is used as a pressure upon the ruling power, then it becomes a hideous and subversive liberty of the people. During the amongst just ended, evidence of arrogance has been given by the representatives of enormous wealth suddenly acquired, which intimated that the government would be best represented by the plutocracy of the country. It was indeed humiliating enough when changes were made and not refuted that the highest privilege of the republic—choosing the justices of the supreme court—would be carried by the chief representatives of wealth if not money-bags. And I cannot imagine pure or true to the exemption and the nobility Judge was shown to become a ruler in fulfillment. But the people rose in their might and dashed these hopes to pieces.

He says closed stores for tariff reform and have taken a most favorable departure. The state-ment that tariff reformers wish to engage, or can open at free trade, ours and shingle, is false. The supposition that tariff reform means a sudden destruction of industries in which thousands of people have embarked must be an opponents by ton is without the slightest found ation. Tariff reform aims at free raw material, a large reduction of taxation on the commonest necessaries of life, a high rate of duty on wines spirits, tobacco, cigars, and perfumery, and a great reduction of such gigantic tariff swindles as the duty of 80 per cent on window glass, 125 per cent on plate glass, 100 per cent on varnish, and hundreds more of such articles.

Of the prospective changes in the Federal offices, Mr. Moore says:

If the journals who at present indulge in the surmise that recent officials will be dismissed would endeavor to get rid of the best vestige of malice and campaign slander, they would assure the much frightened and deluded officials that it is either the mission of president-elect Cleveland to uphold the civil service system than to destroy it. My advice to the thousands of officials now in the service is to perform their duties faithfully, to give the strikers and blacklegs over to justice, as the law provides, and to refrain from needless chance, and leave politics for a while to take care of itself. By so doing they will render not only good service to the country, but to their own personal interests. In my opinion, it would indeed be a political blunder, which is worse than a crime, to dismiss worthy officials who have shown ability and integrity for no other reason than their political faith.

Book Notices.

The Book-Worm.

A unique, handsome, and delightfully readable little Monthly Magazine, containing for the year over 300 pages and many fine pictures, all for 25 cents a year, is a recent characteristic product of The Literary Revolution. Each number contains attractive selections from some noted book,—the last presents Prescott's famous chapter on the "Spanish Inquisition." What will interest a vast number of book-buyers will be the regular monthly news of the Revolution's progress,—an enterprise that has wrought wonders in the book world. A specimen copy of The Book-Worm will be sent free to any address. John B. Alden, publisher, 393 Pearl street, New York.

Alden's Literary Revolution.

John B. Alden's Literary Revolution, though possibly not making so large a "noise" in the world as three or four years ago when its remarkable work was new to the public, is really making more substantial progress than ever before. A noticeable item is the improved quality of the books issued. Guizot's famous "History of France," not sold till recently for much less than $50, is put forth in eight small octavo volumes, ranking with the handsomest ever issued from American printing presses, including the 450 full page original illustrations, and is sold for $7.00. Rawlinson's celebrated "Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," is produced in elegant form, with all the maps and illustrations, reduced in price from $18 to $7.75. These are but representatives of an immense list of standard works, ranging in price from two cents to nearly $2000, which are set forth in a descriptive catalogue of two pages, and which is sent free to every applicant. It certainly is worth the cost of a postal card to the publisher, John B. Alden, 393 Pearl street, New York.

The Cottage Hearth.

The December number of the Cottage Hearth is received. It opens with a well-written biographical sketch of Mrs. Frances L. Mace, accompanied by a fine portrait of the lady who will be remembered by our readers as the writer of "Only Waiting," as well as many other poems appealing to our better nature and life. "What they brought home from the Fair," is a laughable story of the adventures of a good-hearted country couple at the Institute Fair in Boston. Mrs. Hunnewell on Flowers, Mrs. Dabney's useful receipts, and the other well-known departments of this fine home magazine, are as usual, timely, practical, and helpful to every one interested in making home the pleasantest spot on earth. The publishers announce that during the coming year they shall not only strive in every way to make the magazine more attractive in its illustrations and mechanical work, but continue their well-defined and long-tested policy of making the Cottage Hearth the standard magazine in its peculiar field of home life. We have made such arrangements that we can offer this magazine and the JOURNAL to new subscribers for only $1. Write to Cottage Hearth Co., Boston, for free sample copy, and see for yourself how much reading we offer for a little money.

Bohemian Corpse-Boards.

When anyone dies, man or woman, the corpse is removed from the death-bed and laid on a board previously cut and prepared to receive it. At the head is a sort of pent-roof, a low gable lower down is a bar across for the seat, and a little shelf at the bottom for the feet. On this the corpse reposes until the funeral. After this, the painting of the board is completed, the inscription filled up; it is then nailed or screwed to a stout post, which is driven into the ground by the roadside, so that the "corpse-board" stands upright till the post rots and allows it to fall, when it crumbles neglected into the soil. The entrance to a village is through an avenue of these horrible memorials. Sometimes, however, they are planted in the depth of the wood, where roads fork—beside mere paths in the most lonesome spots. As they advance in age they decline more and more from the perpendicular and incline to right and left. In the evening gloaming, the appearance of a row of these is just that of a line of tipsy soldiers. This effect is enhanced by the peculiarity of their ornamentations. At the head, under the weatherboard, where rested the head of the corpse, is painted a round white disk, which is adorned with figures of the virgin and a saint in the sky, or the trinity, and in the middle is the deceased, kneeling very upright in his best Sunday clothes. Another variety is a clock-face with the hands pointing to the hour of death. Further down is a tablet, or a pair of tables, on which are inscribed the name, age, and merits of the departed, and some verses of more or less originality and merit.—Cornhill Magazine.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Many young men from the country are ruined in large cities. They fall into the habit of wearing tight boots and are crippled for life.

"So you went to the circus, Mary?" "Oul yes, and enjoyed myself very much." "Did you see the kangaroo in the menagerie?" "I did, and felt sorry for it." "Poor thing, it is dying, isn't it?" "Why, no. What put that into you head?" "The way it acted. When I saw it it seemed to be on its last legs."

A tramp stopped at a house on Main street the other day and asked for something to eat. "Which do you like best," asked the hired girl, "steak or chop?" A young man in Sinshan, N. Y., fell deeply in love with a young lady of Hoosick Falls. She, alas! did not reciprocate. What did the young man do? A blushing young man called upon a Madison avenue florist, one day last week, and gave the proprietor $16 to construct a bouquet which would say, in floral language: "Dearest one, I love you—be mine," and which was to be delivered that evening, without fail, at the residence of a beautiful, accomplished, and auburn-haired girl on Thirty-sixth street. It evidently was delivered, because at an early hour next morning the young lady called at the same florist and invested $2.75 in a bouquet, conveying the message: "No,

IT IS CLEVELAND.

The Great Presidential Contest of 1884 Brought to an End.

The Official Count in New York Shows a Plurality for Cleveland.

Mr. Blaine Discusses the Causes of His Defeat. Gov. Cleveland Interviewed.

THE VOTE OF NEW YORK.

Cleveland's Plurality About 1,100.

Although most of the election returns in the State of New York were practically complete last night, the official canvass of the vote in the county of New York was commenced, and will probably occupy the boards for a week or more. The boards of canvassers consist of the Mayor, Recorder, County Clerk, Sheriff, and Chamberlain, and the law requires that the canvass shall be made in the Common Council Chamber, in the City Hall, between the hours of 10 and 4 o'clock. The boards met yesterday afternoon, and organized by electing Mayor Edson Chairman and Recorder Smyth Secretary. Before proceeding to the canvass, however, the Democratic members of the boards, who had a majority, decided to adjourn over to-day, Thanksgiving Day, and to meet again to-morrow morning. The Republican members objected to this course, and wished to proceed with the canvass, but were overruled by the majority. The boards will meet at 10 o'clock this morning, and will probably remain in session all day. The canvass will be completed to-day, and the result announced to-morrow. The Republicans will make a contest, and will have watchers present to-day to see that the votes are properly counted. The Democrats will also have watchers present. The Republicans claim that they have discovered a number of errors in the returns, and that they will be able to show that Blaine received a majority of the votes cast in the city. The Democrats claim that Cleveland received a majority of 1,100 votes, and that the canvass will not change the result. The Democrats also claim that they have discovered a number of errors in the returns, and that they will be able to show that Cleveland received a majority of 1,100 votes, and that the canvass will not change the result. The Democrats also claim that they have discovered a number of errors in the returns, and that they will be able to show that Cleveland received a majority of 1,100 votes, and that the canvass will not change the result.

"Uncle Sam's Farm."

Extract from the Annual Address of Francis E. Willard, President of the National W. C. T. U.

Uncle Sam owns a farm; it is divided into thirty-eight fields, leased by his nephews, while he has nine new fields besides his home garden, under his care. The use of bitters by the lands is the great curse that inflicts Uncle Sam's farm. It makes the hired men lazy, unhealthy, and many of them criminals. Three or four of his nephews have declared they would not allow this wretched drink to be either made or sold in their fields, have held a meeting of all their tenants and agreed to keep out this nuisance or die in the attempt. They have gone about this with so much pluck and determination that they would actually have kept their fields comparatively free, but for one thing, viz: Uncle Sam has a different theory about controlling this dangerous drink. He says: "It is a great evil but I will make of it 'a great beneficence.' In the first place, we shall always have these bitters made and sold; you may set that down for a final fact. So Farmer John sends it across the water, and I shall let it in, but not until he has paid a heavy tax. That will go a good ways towards supporting me, and make your rent less. Then, since they will make this stuff anyhow, I will just go on in my nine new fields, even on my garden spot, and you must not mind if I have it carried through your side of the way to my own; besides, I'll let 'em make it under my own eye, in places set apart for that purpose right in the fields next to yours, where they haven't this fanatical rule that you have about not letting it be made or sold. Then, in my own garden patch I'll make special arrangements not to have it sold unless each man that keeps it pays so much direct to me. If they'll do that I'll let it come straight into my own house with the big dome. Just Uncle Sam's nephews are not so stupid as the old gentleman imagines. They reply: "Now see here, so long as you given writings to the men that make these bitters, selling them that they may, and taking ninety cents for yourself to every twenty cents they pay for their products, so long will you want this drink made and sold. Don't you see that you are the great bitters maker yourself? Why, you have become so avaricious that you actually hold in your own hand the key to every bitters manufactory on the big farm, and pay your rent there to watch by day and night, so that you shall be sure to get your share. You even sell the bitters men what sort of a building he must put up, and make him give you a bond for the building, and you lock up his materials for making the vile stuff, not however until he has bought and paid for them under your eye. You stand there and weigh and measure and make sure that you know just how much he manufactures, and then you shut it up tight and put a watchdog at the door so that nobody can go in or out without you seeing it. Then when the man sells a gallon you take four fifths of the profits. If he sells to another man that works the stuff into some other kind of drink, you make the last man pay you $200 for this privilege; if he sells it at wholesale you charge him $100; if he sells it out to our hands in small quantities, $25. Then by doing this you make it next to impossible for us to keep the stuff out of our fields. It is so handy to smuggle across the line that we can never keep the abomination out altogether, do what we will. When you cart it across it is so easy to hit a keg drop off here and there.

"Too fair thing for you to do is, to go on of partner-ship with the business yourself, then to send word on into the territory of your nine distant fields that they can never have from you such a lease as you gave us in the thirty-eight older ones, unless they promise never to let the bitters in."

"Heavens," continued these gorged anti-bitters men, "as your rines now stand, you come into our fields, so if you find a man convicted of selling you make him pay you so much, so that he gets a sort of permit from you that makes it harder for us to convict him of his crime. I tell you Uncle Sam, we don't propose to stand this thing much longer, but to send a lot of our men to your garden patch and make you do its justice. We are on the war path for that very thing we've paved on our nerves and are all crammed up on our nerves, and will go along quicker than you've any notion of to turn the bitters out of your big house and clear it up generally.

"Then we'll fix those nine fields so they'll never have a bitters factory or a bitters shop. We'll notify Farmer John across the way that he's got to shut up shop as far as coming over to your farm with his products is concerned; and then we'll proceed to draw up a writting and get all your thirty eight nephews to sign it, promising never to allow this bitters business to go on anywhere inside the boundaries of the old farm, because, if it's made at all, some of the hands are sure to get hold of it."

In the areas of national prohibition we shall fight our hardest battles and win our most substantial victories. Nothing will alarm and anger our opponents like our efforts in this field, because no effort less direct rims a blow so decisive at the very vitals of their trade.

WIT AND HUMOR.

There is a great depression in the business of making glass bottles. The business of emptying them seems to be carried on as briskly as ever.

"Why does Dina get more beaux than I?" asked the elder sister. "I don't know, unless she is a little archer," said mamma, with a quiver of her lips.

A Pennsylvania oil king who has made a fortune in the last three years is advertising for a wife. Very properly, he demands that the lady shall be "refined."

It is a time honored custom in Quincy, Fla., to salute a newly-married woman by firing a cannon. This is to remind them that the battle of life has fairly begun.

A correspondent says: "It is wonderful how many caves have been discovered in Tennessee." We would suggest that the same remark has been applied to Wall street.—Boston Post.

A hen's egg measuring 6¼ by 8¾ inches has been laid on the table of a Georgia editor. He proposes to keep it and let it ripen for the next dramatic combination that comes down that way.

"First come the missionaries, then the Consuls, and then after them the armies," said King Theodore of Abyssinia some years ago to a French traveler, explaining his abhorrence of explorers and missionaries.

"You ought to put a sign over that hatchway," said a policeman to a storekeeper, "or some one may tumble into it." "All right," replied the merchant; and he tied one of his "Fall Opening" cards to the railing.

Queen Victoria invariably has her tea cream analyzed by a chemical expert. As yet, nothing but pure chalk and water and corn-starch have been discovered. The Queen lives in hopes of striking a trace of cream sometime.

A young man meaning to be very gallant, presented a lady with a rose, saying: "Madame, allow me to present you to one of your sisters." Judge of his chagrin when a bug crawled out and sat down in the middle of the rose.

Twelve-year-old bad boy: "Sis, your feller's in a tight place." Sister, alarmed: "Why, what do you mean, Bob?" "When I was getting your face powder in the drug store this noon I saw him in behind the screen." Sister: "Shh!—papa will hear." Bad boy: "Pa was there, too!"—Burlington Free Press.

A writer in the Century says it would take a limited express train several hundred years to reach the sun, and the fare at the customary rates would be over $2,500,000. That settles it! We shall never make a railroad journey to the sun. The fare is reasonable enough, but we couldn't neglect our business so long.—Norristown Herald.

The following is the curriculum of the schools of journalism: "Don't write on but one side of the paper. Use capital letters when necessary. Don't make a paragraph you where one is needed. Spell proper names correctly and others as nearly correct as convenient." By observing these rules anyone can become a great journalist.

Old man Pettigrew, of Austin, is very precise in his statements, and is also a strict constructionist. One morning a neighbor rushed in on Pettigrew while the latter was eating his breakfast and exclaimed excitedly: "Your house is on fire." "Sir?" "Your house is burning up." "You are wrong sir." "Wrong?" "Yes, sir; this is not my house. I only rent it."—Texas Siftings.

Boy howling. His mother gives him an apple. "Don't want that old apple," he cries. "I am glad of it," the mother replies, "for it is little sister's, and she'll want it when she wakes up." Then he wants it. "Gimme!" he cries, and he is not satisfied until the apple is gnawed beyond resemblance. Then he feels better. The majority of boys do not grow up to be good citizens.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Something lacking. Baker—"Yes, mum; I now put my name on my bread to prevent my rivals from imitating my loaves and getting my custom." Housekeeper—"A wise precaution. But was that bread you left here yesterday genuine?" "O, yes, mum." "Then I would suggest that you add something besides your name to the loaves." "Certainly, mum, if you say so. What is it?" "The date."

A Boylston street dentist was recently asked by one of his lady patients if he would make a set of false teeth for her dog, who, being old, had lost his own. She said she was willing to have the experiment made on her darling, whose digestion was now greatly impaired, and that many other people she knew would be glad to have their pets' absent teeth replaced if her dog's set was a success. The dentist declined to try.—Boston.

The dude is no longer fashionable. He is out of date and far removed from the fashionable men of to-day. The dude was in his glory a little less than two years ago, when the fashion of wearing abominably tight trousers, variant smiles, pointed boots, and silver-headed sticks first started in. For the first time in the history of civilization a fashion was popular which gave narrow-chested, eafavorous, and spindle-shanked young men a chance for their lives.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"Wife—"Did you meet Mrs. Smythe at the party last evening? She has been abroad a long time, you know." Husband—"Yes, I had quite a chat with her, and, judging from her manner, I am very much afraid I offended her." Wife—"Offended her. And how, pray?" Husband—"By paying her a very pretty compliment." Wife—"Nonsense. A woman is never offended by a pretty compliment. What did you say to her?" Husband—"I told her she was growing old gracefully." Wife—"Well, you are a fool."

The tallest bird known to ethnologists was found by Professor Herbert in the lower eocene deposits near Paris, France. It was over twelve feet in height, and could have bitten a man's head off as easily as a woodpecker can nip a cherry. We cannot be too thankful that this bird has gone out of fashion and existence. Ladies would have wanted to wear it on their hats, and the price would have been frightfully high. And besides, men who sat behind such bonnet ornaments in the theaters would be unable to see whether a ballet or a prayer-meeting was in progress on the stage.—Norristown Herald.

Joe Jefferson says the effect that playing one part a great number of times has on an actor is forgetfulness of his line. "A story is told," he adds, "of an English actor, who, after playing one part for a very long time, forgot his lines one night. 'It's very strange,' said the stage manager, when the actor came off, 'that you are not perfect in that part by this time. You have been playing it for 200 nights.' 'Well,' said the actor, 'do you expect me to remember it forever?' I think one part cannot be played too often if the actor does not lose his interest in it. It is just as it is with age. We are only old according to our feelings, not our years."

"I explain it all to you," said one of the partners in a furniture house in Western Michigan when he had proceeded its paper. "You see I and my brudder Shake vhas partners. We each draw $20 per week and we had money left to buy all our debts and keep up stock. Shake he goes oaber to Chicago, and enforpouly asks him if we make some dividend and how much. Vhen he comes home he says we doan' stand up mit odder houses if we doan' make some dividends. Dot look all right to me. We have $2,000 laid away, and I take half and Shake half. Vhen some drafts come Shake doan' like to pay, and I feels shust dot vhay, too. If you have some dividends, dot vhas all clear for you, and you doan' put him back in der hire. I vhas a little mixed out, and I guess we like to sell out."—Burlington Street News.

The trial of Daniel Holcomb, at Jackson, Mich., for the murder of the Cronch family has been indefinitely postponed on account of the death of Frank E. Hewett, prosecuting attorney.

The Grand Opera-house, in Market street, St. Louis, valued at $125,000, was destroyed by fire.

The Rock Island plow-works which have been closed for some time, have resumed, giving employment to about 300 men.

R. C. Winston & Co., of St. Paul, hardwood dealers, have made an assignment, with liabilities placed at $80,000.

A letter from an intimate friend of John Wilkes Booth is published at Baltimore, to the effect that Booth did not murder President Lincoln for political reasons, but for revenge. After tears and entreaties Booth secured President Lincoln's promise that Captain John Yates Beall, condemned to be shot as a spy, would be spared, but a few days later Beall was executed, and then Booth swore vengeance upon the President, and kept his oath.

In regard to the plague prevailing in Southwest Virginia, a telegram from Lynchburg says: "The latest advices concerning the epidemic in Wise, Lee, Dickinson, and Buchanan Counties are heartrending. On Guests River, in Wise County, within a radius of four miles are thirty cases of the disease. In one instance the father, mother, and six children died. Many persons die for want of attention. Business is suspended, all being concerned with the sick and dying. Six persons were buried in one graveyard in one day. The disease is assuming a milder form in some localities. Not less than 175 of the best citizens of Wise County alone have died."

WASHINGTON.

In the opinion of Senator Allison, of Iowa, the current session of Congress is not likely to be a long one, nor one from a political standpoint. Cleveland's administration, he thinks, will be conservative rather than progressive.

Senator Edmunds is said to be preparing legislation relative to the Pacific railroads. The Senate Judiciary Committee has the funding act under consideration, and strong influences are at work to secure favorable action on the House bill.

Another effort is on foot in Washington looking to securing the whisky-bonded period for two years.

In the Court of Claims at Washington the case of The Government vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, involving payment demands reach $1,310,000, will e the offset claims of the railway amount to $1,500,000.

POLITICAL.

Albany (N. Y.) special: The State Board of canvassers have completed its duties and adjourned. The proceedings throughout the sessions were harmonious and without a ripple of excitement. No questions arose that were not easily, promptly, and satisfactorily settled. The technical errors in several of the counties were corrected by the canvassers, and the 12 town and Western Air Line Railway, which proposes to extend through Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

At Logansport, Ind., the Rev. W. E. Loucks, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, examined H. J. CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Something to Remember.

At the request of leading democrats and others, and for ease of future reference, the following paragraphs from the Sentinel are grouped together. They are presumed to reflect the true fawardness of the editors, one of whom at least, may find it desirable to ask favors of the people he has here insulted. Especially noticeable, also, is the effect of local public opinion in the modified utterances of Nov. 26, amounting almost to a retraction

From the Charlevoix Sentinel November 12.

We like ladies—no disguising that fact when women take a hand in politics, distance lends enchantment.

"Ladies of the W. C. T. U. have reason to feel proud and encouraged over the prohibition victories in Michigan this fall." They have, have they? Well we know of a good many ladies that are not proud of it.

All W. C. T. U. ladies of intelligence and cultivation regret the outcome of the late election. They realize that there is a temperance reform needed in the domain of morals of most vital interest to them, and that the selection of a libertine for president is a step in the wrong direction.

From the Charlevoix Sentinel November 26.

The Sentinel does not take notice of small things, nor subvert its columns to the gratifying of personal malice or jealousy. It has a higher aim. This has always been its aim, and will continue to be.

But we are not one of those who pretend to believe that a "Pandora's box of evils" will be opened upon the country by the incoming administration. We do not believe that the confederate debt will be paid, nobel claims allowed, or rebels pensioned, and a republican senate not stand as an insurmountable barrier against those measures. We are frank to confess our belief that Grover Cleveland would not give them the sanction of his signature.

Notes and News.

Out of the forty five democratic congressmen who followed the lead of Randall and voted with the republicans to defeat tariff reform legislation only 18 have been returned to congress.

A Fort Gratiot man loudly proclaimed that if Cleveland was elected this country would be depopulated, owing to his surprise when a post after he learned Cleveland's election, his wife presented him a pair of cle

The persistent malignity of republican organs toward the prohibition element will tend to solidify rather than weaken their ranks, and the purpose of that hostility to force them back within the republican fold, will prove a failure.

We have no idea that with a democratic president there will be any change in the monetary affairs of state or nation. Business will not be depressed or ruin come to us. It is the talk of the political shark, and merely for effect, to put another dollar in his pocket.—Cadillac Times.

A leading merchant of Fife Lake informs the Comet that the number of lumber camps in that vicinity is largely in excess of last year and that although they are at present running small crews, they are preparing for a big cut this winter. This means a large amount business for Fife Lake.

The "Kazoo" is the name of a new instrument of torture shaped like a toy whistle and operating upon the principal of a comb and paper combination. It emits a sound as weird and fantastic as its name. In competent hands it is capable of doing great execution. It figured quite largely in political demonstrations in large cities, and is not unknown in local unsent circles.

The effects of Cleveland's election are making themselves felt with unexpected promptness. Last Monday the Cleveland, Ohio, rolling works resumed operations in all departments for the first time since 1876. They give employment to 3,000 hands, being 1,700 more than was ever before employed by that company. On the same day one of the largest of the Pennsylvania iron furnaces started up after several months of idleness.

We learn from the Tribune that the Harrison Wire Works or Wire Pulling Works, of St. Louis, have gone out of blast on account of the election of Cleveland. As a matter of fact, the Harrison Wire Works of St. Louis collapsed about one month before the election took place. The election of five republican presidents and the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Burchard as White house chaplain could not have saved the Harrison Wire Works from bankruptcy.—N. Y. World.

Out croppings of genuine coal have been found in the Pigeon river section of Cheboygan county. For years there have been rumors of coal underlying portions of this county, but we believe this is the first instance where any definite discoveries have been make. We understand arrangements are being made to investigate the find and see just what can be developed. Should favorable prospects be the result, a company will undoubtedly be organized to open up a mine. —Tribune.

A steam barge loaded with lumber and towing a schooner with the same kind of a cargo ran ashore on Whiskey Island, one of the Beaver group, last Tuesday. The barge threw overboard a quantity of lumber and succeeded in getting off, but a tug was sent to release the schooner, which was only accomplished after 400,000 feet of lumber had been thrown into the lake. This is a better crop than corn or wheat for the Islanders, and every available craft was engaged picking up lumber.

The great crisis of the presidential year—the presidential election itself—is now over, and the ill effects on business of the excitement that has prevailed even since early summer ought soon to pass away, giving place to increased business activity. It will take some weeks, perhaps, for the tumultuous waves of overwrought feeling to subside, but when the public mind recovers its normal placidity, its grasp upon the business problems before the people will be all the stronger for temporary relaxation afforded by the campaign.—Marquette Mining Journal.

The plan of having school books paid for out of the public school fund is finding favor where tried. If it be part of the duty of the state to educate its children, as the believers in the public school system claim it is, it is very easy to say that that duty includes the expense for teachers, for houses, etc. The matter of buying books is a great hardship to many doing it, in many cases, keeps children out of the schools. The state could buy the books at lower prices than the individual parent can, and the additional tax for purchasing books would be light on the individual taxpayer.—Adrian Times.

Forest culture is the most certain investment which the owners of land in this country can make. F. W. Gloam, M. P., of Ottawa, Ont., "catches on" to this idea, and has put it to a practical test, by purchasing 5,000 walnut trees, four feet high, in the western states and planting a portion of them on his own unproductive real estate and inducing his neighbors to invest in the balance. Five thousand walnut trees in thirty years, in the natural order of things, will be worth about half a million dollars.—Lumbermen's Gazette.

"The transforming power of Christianity" will be discussed by Rev. C. F. VanAnken, at the Congregational church Sunday morning.

Notwithstanding the reports of hard times and the distressed condition of business, there never was a time in the history of the country, apparently, when there was so much building going on as at present. Every local journal in the country sings the same tune in regard to this matter.

Fred A. Smith, who has for six years been chief manipulator of mail at this postoffice, resigned his clerkship last week. He has been recommended to the position of cashier in the savings bank, in place of G. S. Thomas (who resigns to engage in other business) but his plans for the future are not fully determined. Young and ambitious blood counts in the upbuilding of a town, consequently we hope to see Fred remain among us.

J. Milo Enton is running a stage between Charlevoix and Petoskey, starting from Petoskey in the morning, and rocurning in the afternoon. Those of our citizens who prefer to patronize home industry, now have a chance to give Mr. Enton a benefit. The stage leaves Petoskey soon after the arrival of the morning train, and those going out on the night train will find the stage to their convenience in the afternoon from here. With Mr. Henry Lake as driver we have no doubt of the care and accommodation of the passengers.

Norwood.

Sleighing passable and quite a number are using it hauling last blocks for Geo. Van Pelt, and lumber posts and ties for Guiles & Nash.

The entertainment given last Saturday evening, for the benefit of McCartney, by Miss Cody and others, was not as well attended as it ought to have been, considering the quality. Every one there was highly entertained and pronounced it splendid. The "Fire Bell" piece was a decided success,—we expected every minute to hear the engine and hose cart pass along; "Jack" is a terror to ring the bell.

The dance given under the auspices of the "Norwood Dancing Club," Thanksgiving night, was a success; thirty one numbers being sold, and every person having a good time. There will be another dance the night of the 12th

The Congregational Church Completed.

Last Sunday morning the new Congregational church was occupied for the first time. For several weeks it has been ready for occupancy except the windows, and these came on the Lawrence on Friday.

The services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. F. VanAnken, and instead of a sermon, he briefly reviewed the history of the society, and the building.

During the summer of 1882, Mr. VanAnken came here at the request of the American home missionary society. Meetings were held, in which permanent organization and prospects were discussed, and an invitation to become pastor extended to Mr. VanAnken, and accepted by him. Steps were at once taken toward the building of a house of worship. Plans were submitted and accepted, a lot which had been purchased was sold, and a larger and more suitable one purchased, material engaged, and everything done that could be as fast as the means would permit.

Late in the summer of 1883, the work of building was commenced, and the walls were enclosed before winter. But little was done toward completing the inside until this last summer, except to solicit means from every available source.

In the matter of contributions, valuable assistance has been rendered by Olivet College, by visitors at both resort, by various churches and individuals throughout the state, and by generous donations of many of our citizens.

While the building is not large, it is handsome, well finished, and large enough for the needs of the society for a number of years. The church which two years ago numbered only seven souls, has now increased to 34. The society has had a similarly strong, healthy growth, and has the satisfaction of having lived on the pay-as-you-go plan.

In addition to Mr. VanAuken's successful work in Charlevoix, he has done considerable missionary work in the country around. Ironton has a young but ambitious society, and already sighs for a house of worship. Good work has been done at the Ross school house and the society there is pushing forward handsomely having already a membership of over thirty.

At Horton's Bay a lively interest in the work is awakened, and the fruits of his labor is more and more apparent every week. An organization is soon to be effected, a parsonage and house of worship commenced within the coming year.

The outlook is indeed gratifying, when all the circumstances are considered.

The work of laying carpets will be begun this week, the chandelier is expected to be in place, and all the services, morning, evening, and weekly meetings will be held there hereafter.

Historical Society.

The Society met Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Byron See, that being their last opportunity before the departure of Mr. and Mrs. See for the South. The house was well filled, and the program interesting. After the reading of the minutes, while waiting for members of the Glee Club, Mrs. D. C. Loveday entertained the company with a piano solo. The absent members having arrived, the Glee Club rendered a choice selection. The historical reading of the evening was by Fred W. Maxam, and reviewed the life and times of Cadillac, the Atlantean statesman and explorer, who flourished A. C. 994 999. A timely paper was read by Mrs. Bradbeer and Carlstedt, was well received. After a remission Mrs. E. M. Clark gave a select reading, and Messrs. Bradbeer and Carlstedt rendered a duet. A selection was then read by A. D. Bradbeer elicited frequent laughter and applause. After another selection by the Glee Club, the Society adjourned, to meet next Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Upright.

Ramblings Around Hayes.

One or two of our editors are fishing in Horton's Bay with tolerable good success.

Mr. Rose was in our neighborhood one day last week fulfilling the duties of his office, as oil inspector.

Mr. Charles Hines, of the firm of Carroll & Hines, Horton's Bay, returned home from Chicago on Wednesday. In his absence "he took unto himself a wife."

The majority of the inhabitants are enjoying good health with one or two exceptions, Mr. Bacon being one of the exceptions, as he is not able to leave his room.

The snow lies fifteen to the depth of about ten inches, which has given us pretty good sleighing and the majority of us are making good use of it in hauling out wood, &c.

It may not be known to many of your readers that there is another small town started in Charlevoix county by the name of Young Chicago. It starts out with flattering prospects, having one store in the course formed, on the banks of Pine Lake, about three and one half miles northwest from Mr. Bacon's on the Charlevoix road.

We see that Mr. Rosetta Pell, about a week ago, in order to procure a diploma so he can practice in Hayes.

Why is it that our supervisor does not see to the fencing of our cemetery? We are under the impression that two years ago there was money raised for the express purpose of having our cemetery fenced in a proper manner, but by some oversight or negligence it has not been done. We have heard it stated that the job was let, and the parties paid for doing the work, and for humanity's sake let the authorities see to it and have our cemetery in its present condition, where the cattle have had free liberty to roam over the graves, knocking down the railings, headboards, etc.

For the last year there has been a man practicing medicine and officiating here as a physician, without a diploma, which, we believe, is contrary to law, and it should be attended to by the medical fraternity, or some one authorized.

Laboral Club.

At a business meeting of the Charlevoix Laboral Club, held at the Bridge street house, December 1st, the following subjects were selected to constitute the season's course of lectures: 1. Liberalism. 2. Human Nature. 3. What is Truth? 4. Who and what is a human being. The first lecture and entertainment will be held in the opera house on Monday night, December 22, 1884, when a very interesting program will be presented.

I have just put in operation in my Keller Shop building a Mill with a capacity of 20 to 5 bushels per hour, for grinding Wheat, Corn, Buckwheat, Feed, &c. Bring your Grain to me, and I will grind it so you can take it home the same day. Platform scales for weighing grain, so that every man may weigh his grain and grind it all only the amount allowed to toll—no other machinery. If this mill is well patronized, other machinery will be added until I have a first class flour mill.

HEW TRUST.

BY LILY M. CUREY.

It was long ago, a dear grandmother
Sat in a low-walled room;
Sat and sang in the twilight gloom,
Over a childish head at rest
On her breast;
Sang in the lush as could sing none other!
Hit memory's her tied gil sound,
Filling and thrilling my heart-day-long:
Almost I see her cross of rose
Silver lace.

"I am rich," said the dear grandmother;
"See my wealth," and her head drew
A face that wondered with eyes of blue;
"See my gold," and she stroked the hair,
Fine and fair.

It was long ago, that dear grandmother
Locked and counted mine in state,
Heard with pity a sobbing plaint,
And for a song of her own came afraid
Sadly heaved;
Prayed in the hush, as she did pray none other;
Hymn of peace and grace-assured,
Loving-kindness, the week soul heard,
Rock of in the haven of sure rest,
On that breast.

"Trust in God!" spoke the dear grandmother,
Gently in the gathering gloom,
And the hush of that hee-walled room;
"Hide Hie wife" and the soul stood
Thou was stayed,
By the trust that was sure and grand—none other!

TEDDIE.

BY GEORGIANA FEATHERS-TONHAUGH.

A leaf tinged with scarlet, peeping here and there amongst the maples as they whirled parted the swaying branches. The rustling sound of the grape-vine covered the gallery, with its bunches of luscious, half-ripe fruit. The full note of the cricket, hidden in some mysterious recess, whose worn, though invisible, makes its presence known by the shrill, almost impatient, chirrup; all were omens of the dying summer, who, as it stepped lightly into the footsteps of the August day, took no heed of the balmy winds as they whispered their last good-bye to the forest.

Pane where my love lies dreaming, sang a clear tenor voice inside the arbor, and in another instant a tall form was leaning against the doorway and peering cautiously within.

"How you frightened me, Teddie."

"Oh, pray do excuse me, I really didn't know you were here, Dorothy," he said, leaning his tall form more firmly against the arbor, with an air of having come to stay.

"No, I suppose not," Dorothy replied, "when Aunt Joe informed you that I had gone to the arbor you no doubt pictured me seated upon the floor, and to be sure you were singing, 'cause where my love lies dreaming' is that huge bunch of grapes you somehow fancied the arbor day."

Teddie chistled. "Well, I will make no confession, but give the grapes the benefit of the doubt; dreaming if they were ripe I would half believe that you had been indulging too freely, and the effects was they have made you a little——"

"Sir, I suppose," Dorothy said, "don't be afraid of hurting my feelings. When that paragon of amiability, Teddie Forrester, is around, every one else is cross by contrast."

Teddie hummed the tune he had sung outside of the arbor. "I didn't know you had such a good opinion of me before," he said. "Have you ever heard that grape-juice will make people quite brilliant, when ordinarily they are very commonplace individuals?"

"Oh, indeed!" Dorothy replied, leaning her head against the side of the arbor in a weary fashion, and regarding him through her half-closed eyelids; "that accounts for Teddie Forrester's fre quent bursts of wit.

Teddie shrugged his shoulders. "I fear my amiability has proved unfortunate for me," he said, reaching out the bunch of grapes he had particularly admired one day, and throwing them one by one at the half-averted figure of the girl. "After having tramped all the way from Lookout Hotel through the broiling sun, you haven't even given me the hospitality to ask me in, or invite me to a seat beside you," the young man said in a tone half-injured, half-chiding.

Dorothy laughed. "I am familiar enough with your peculiarities to know that, if you desire a thing, you never wait for an invitation or hospitalities to be offered, so you understand why I thought you preferred standing."

Teddie Forrester dropped the denuded grape stem and walked leisurely to a seat a few rods from Dorothy. "Do you suppose I would have the temerity to cross the threshold of your aunt's door had she not bidden me do so?" he asked; "or even have eaten the delicious piece of pumpkin pie without her having offered it? but, mischief, she has not the gift of reading my peculiar nature, and was back, considerably person, and, not willing to disenchant her, I allowed her to believe me sated."

It was a fact, which, after much observation, had made itself apparent to Dorothy, that, next to her own golden pumpkin pies, her Aunt Joe admired Teddie Forrester, though she had frequently been known to pronounce him extravagant, and to be giving himself up entirely to the vanities of the world.

"It is certainly the middle of August," Teddie said, abruptly.

"Why do you remind me of things so unpleasant as that the summer is waning, and suggest to one's mind the necessity of wearing their winter cloak and overshoes?" Dorothy said, a trifle impatiently.

Teddie laughed sardonically. "That will be scarcely necessary if you govern yourself as the Count Von Auer, as you have been doing all the season."

"Count Von Auer, and Teddie Forrester, what do you mean?" Dorothy asked, in a tone of surprise, and turning quickly to either, and, for the first time, fully listening attentively to what was being said.

"Why, apparently the Count, is pay-

Dorothy's voice in the Count's name with sudden force upon the ground, and she knew grown painfully matter-of-fact, but his words came to her indistinct and far away, for her thoughts had drifted back to Teddie Forrester, and she wondered what young woman at the hotel he was favoring with the greatest number of waltzes.

A rambling of wheels caught Dorothy's ear; somebody was coming quickly behind them, and in a moment a village cart passed them, in which was seated Teddie. Teddie in an immaculate morning toilet, and in injured expression upon his face, as he turned his head in an opposite direction.

As Dorothy and her companion drove along, the Count quite unconscious of the tragedy going on before him, and Dorothy almost crushed by the heartless conduct of Teddie, a vivid flash of lightning caused the two spirited animals to plunge suddenly forward.

Dorothy and the Count glanced behind them, and perceived that the small dark cloud that had forbade no evil in the early evening had gradually become a mass of black clouds banded up in the west, and were now rapidly overspreading the heavens.

The Count turned the horses' heads further on was a cold stretch of country, containing no habitation in which to find shelter. To reach the hotel before the storm broke was their only alternative.

Dorothy shuddered as she drew her light shawl around her and glanced uneasily at the lowering clouds that seemed almost to touch the earth.

The day had been nearly without warning, preceded by no sights and the irregular row of trees upon the steep bank on either side of them were swayed in wild confusion as the wind moaned through their branches, and now the clouds, so long threatening, poured down their torrents upon the earth.

A sudden flash of lightning, which lit up the black and jagged rifts of clouds, shone in the miniature lake that had been formed by a depression in the road, and the thoroughly frightened animals, startled into a new fear by the glistening water, plunged forward and in a moment the Count had been precipitated over them.

Dorothy looked up.

"Thank heaven you are not killed outright!" Teddie said, with an unmistakable quaver in his voice. "I thought at least your arm was broken as I lifted you up."

Dorothy stretched out that member quite firmly.

"No, Teddie," she said, "not my arm, but my heart, because when you passed us this evening you turned your head the other way."

Teddie smiled and felt comforted, for he knew that Dorothy had not been suffering injured in any way.

Years after, sauntering through one of the streets of New York, the attention of Teddie Forrester was drawn to Dorothy, was attracted by a man exhibiting a dancing bear to the populace. Teddie laughed aloud at the scene and one standing in a group made them glance around.

"Is it possible you see that man with the bear?" the man who had laughed asks his companion. "Well, years ago he was the lover of my cousin's much over in one of the Territories, and, while I was on a visit to Paris, he nine one of my best spans of horses killing one and disabling in maiming the other, while playing the role of a foreign Count at a small watering-place."

Teddie Forrester and his wife pressed forward to seen the features of the sorrower of the bear. A cold burst of merriment from Teddie's lips, while a curious glow of mortification dyed Dorothy's face. It was the Count Von Auer.

Our Old Friend Josie.

Every day while at Trouville I saw a showy lady of most voluminous proportions and gorgeously arrayed in Americanne, driving out in a dashing victoria or slowly gliding along like a frigate under full sail through the narrow streets. Everybody looked after her, for she was a most lookafter-able person. I could not tell why it believed her to be an American unless because of her elaborate costume, for she was a vivid brunette, such as one sees a thousand times oftener in France than in the United States, and her heavily powdered complexion told me tales of nativity anywhere between Chicago and Timbuctoo. Upon inquiry I was told that she was a Cuban widow, immensely rich and staying at the Roches Noires. One day she sailed past us upon the beach as I sat there in company with a certain New York criminal lawyer. I called his attention to the showy Cuban widow. "Cuban!" he exclaimed, quite startled; astonishment. "Why, that is the Ed Stokes and Jim Fisk's widow, Josie Mansfield."—Paris Letter.

RUSSIAN MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

A Social Barbarism of the Country of the Northern Bear.

A token of the social barbarism of Russia in the olden times was found in the position assigned the female sex. Even a czar's daughter had much to complain of, for they were very seldom allowed to marry, and they were very generally immured for life in a convent. In all ranks the women were treated as inferior beings, and governed by tyrannic and, except in the case of peasants and serfs, an almost Oriental seclusion was their lot. A husband might flog his wife at his pleasure, and even if she died under his hand the criminal law failed to touch him. The wife, on the other hand, who might be goaded by his cruelty to the murder of her husband, was ruthlessly buried alive.

What our travelers report of the method employed to select wives for the czar affords further illustration of the backwardness of Muscovite civilization in that country. Instead of seeking suitable alliances with foreign courts, or among the noble families at home, the custom was, when a czar was to be married, to issue a proclamation inviting all marriageable girls of good position and tolerable pretensions to beauty to present themselves at Moscow on a given day for his czarish Majesty's inspection, and after a careful scrutiny of the hundreds of fair candidates for the great matrimonial prize, the royal choice was announced by the sovereign.

But there was still room for the proverbial slip between the cup and the lip. Disappointed families were apt to seek revenge for the failure of their candidate by endeavoring to "get at" and disable the successful beauty. In 1671 one of these brides-elect was drugged by the ruling clique at court, and thrown into such a state of apparent disease that she was pronounced incurable, and banished with all her relatives to Siberia. Soon afterward another actually died of foul play on the very day fixed for her wedding.

When Peter's father, the Czar Alexis, was considering his first marriage, in 1671, and the elect maiden was being arrayed in the royal robes, the jealousy-stung courtiers tried to twist her hair so tightly that she swooned in his presence, and the complaisant physicians were ordered to declare her hopelessly epileptic, with the usual result of exile to Siberia. Peter's own mother, the pretty dark haired Natalie Naryshkin, who became the second wife of Alexis, narrowly escaped a similar fate. She was the niece by marriage and also the foster child of Ilya Miloslavski, principal minister to the czar. The royal widower noticed her when she brought her little charge, Peter, to play with her, and offered her marriage. It happened that a proclamation had been issued by the czar ordering the marriage of the Czar's principal minister, Matveef, at whose house the royal widower noticed her when she brought her little charge, Peter, to play with her, and offered her marriage. It happened that a proclamation had been issued by the czar ordering the marriage of the Czar's principal minister

Are we a Political Party.

Among the many unfounded charges that have been made against the W. C. T. U. since its organization none are more absurd than the chief accusation of the present time, that it has become a political party. This charge is based upon the action of the St. Louis convention, wherein the duly elected representatives of the various state and local unions of the country resolved to lend their influence to that national political organization which declares in its platform for prohibition and home protection.

It would seem to the unprejudiced mind to be still unsustained in political craftiness, that a political party must be made up of something more tangible than "still voice." Political parties have died and worn has ceased them, but not from "suffocation" as supported by voice.

Did we see how resolutions operate as mere bodies than our own Executive, the Congregational Monthly union of the city early in October passed the following resolution word about the same proportion as that adopted at the St. Louis convention.

The President's Fourth Annual Message to Congress.

The Questions of Finance, Revenue and Taxation Discussed.

Congress Asked to Repeal All Excise Taxes Except on Whisky.

The Immediate Suspension of the Coinage of Silver Dollars Recommended.

The Attention of Congress Directed to the Necessity of Strengthening the Navy.

The Working of the Civil Service Law Has Answered the Anticipations of Its Friends.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Since the close of your last session, the American people, in the exercise of their highest right of suffrage, have chosen the Chief Magistrate for the term soon ensuing. When I entered upon that trust at the period in the current history that has the long political end of which so recently precedes the day of the national election soon to be followed by the inauguration of the successor of the gallant citizen who was then called to the helm of state, it was indeed a solemn moment, and suitable the duty it imposed upon me to address to you words of congratulation that, after the severe ordeal of the polls were passed, and while the public mind was still stirred by the heat of political excitement, was accustomed, the peaceful sequence of the change, the unbroken confidence of the people in the executive patriotism and chivalry were the surest guarantees of the national welfare. Nothing could more strikingly illustrate the impress of the American system, its power of self-government, its abhorrence of force as a means of political discussion, its habits of obedience to the popular will, than the incidents of the presidential election of 1880. Nothing could more exhibit the strength and the stability of our political institutions.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Eight years have passed since a controversy concerning the control of any interoceanic canal shall have called the attention of the Congress of the United States to the question of the formulation of such regulations by assuming the exclusive right to the control of the canal which the genius of the Old World could suggest or the ingenuity of the Pacific coast could devise. The Panama Canal was projected and built by the people of France, has been completed at an enormous cost of money and of life, and is expected to rend New York as much nearer to Japan and China as Liverpool is now brought by the shortest sea route. Nothing could more strikingly illustrate the interest of the American people in the speedy completion of the work, and in all of the timely completion of its projected open vessels than to be placed.

GERMANY.

Our relations with Germany, a country which contributes to our own sum of the best elements of citizenship, continue to be cordial. The United States have extradition treaties with several of the German States, but, by reason of the limitations of those treaties and of the imperial rule, the application of such treaties to the existing circumstances of the relations of the two countries requires a single convention to embrace all the territory of the empire.

GREAT BRITAIN.

It affords me pleasure to say that our intercourse with Great Britain continues to be of a most friendly character.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Government of Hawaii has indicated its willingness to enter into negotiations for the provisions of the existing reciprocity treaty. Such continuance, in view of the relations of that country to the American system of States, should, in my judgment, be favored.

HAYTI.

The revolution in Hayti against the established Government has terminated. While it was in progress it became necessary to enforce our neutrality laws by instituting proceedings against those who were charged with violating them. The chief of the provisional government has been duly recognized.

TAHITI ON BOUNDS OF ACT.

Much anxiety has lately been displayed by various European Governments, especially in the southern part of Italy, for the purpose of an import duties on works of art. It is well to consider whether the present discrimination in favor of productions of American artists abroad is not liable to be misconstrued in certain countries generally beholden it may, in the practical exercise of the power, to the prejudice of the rich fields for observation, study and labor which they have hitherto found.

TAHITI.

There is a prospect that the long pending troubles of the interior tribes of Japan may be remedied at an early day by the action held at Tokio. While this Government fully recognizes the equal rights of all nations in Japan to the enjoyment of the privileges of the most favored nation, it would not oppose the general adoption of such further reforms as Japan may be disposed to effect in furtherance of a mutual policy of intercourse with the nations.

MEXICO.

During the past year the most cordial good will between our own Government and that of Mexico has been maintained. The boundary question, and commercial reciprocity, concluded Jan. 20, 1883, have been satisfactorily settled, and the full legislation of Congress to become effective. The boundary line is decided and, by means of the best measures to claim your action, a full force of civil and criminal jurisdiction and essential rights to each to be declared, and the Mexican Government stands ready to consider and to conclude a like treaty in relation to the boundary between Texas and Mexico.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

The war between Guatemala on the one hand and Salvador and Honduras on the other, which continued to the latter part of January, 1885, was terminated by the treaty of peace concluded at Guatemala City on the 30th of that month. The treaty was negotiated by the United States minister to Guatemala, and the terms of peace were arranged in accordance with the views of this Government as communicated to the representatives of the United States.

It is believed that when the treaty shall have been in force a short time the scope of present provisions will be found sufficient to meet the present and future requirements of the countries concerned, and that a renewal of the treaty will not be necessary.

HONDURAS.

The death of our representative at Honduras, Mr. Hall, has been followed by the selection of a successor, who has been duly accredited to the Government of that country.

NICARAGUA.

The treaty between Nicaragua and the United States for the construction of a ship canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, through the territory of Nicaragua, has been duly ratified by the Senate and by the Government of Nicaragua, and the exchange of ratifications will probably take place within a few months. The treaty will be submitted to you for such legislation as may be necessary to its execution on the part of the United States.

COSTA RICA.

The boundary question between Costa Rica and Nicaragua has more than once been the source of serious embarrassment to both countries. It is the most unhappy relation of neighborhood, and the duty of the United States to use its friendly offices to prevent the interruption of peace between them is plain and imperative. Upon the request of both countries, I am glad to say that I have consented to undertake the friendly office of arbitration between them, and that if the boundary line shall be found to be in dispute, I shall be ready to name a competent person to act as arbitrator on the part of the United States. It is hoped that the boundary question may be finally settled by the action of the arbitrator.

COLOMBIA.

The long pending question between the United States and Colombia, growing out of the interoceanic transit across the Isthmus of Panama, has been finally settled by the ratification of a treaty between the two countries, which was proclaimed on the 4th of May last. The treaty secures the right of transit across the Isthmus in consideration of the payment by the United States to Colombia of the sum of $7,000,000, in satisfaction of all claims for indemnity for the events of 1885, and of an annual subsidy of $250,000 in gold, to begin when the present postal convention between the two countries shall terminate. The convention for the settlement of claims between the two countries, which was signed at the same time as the treaty, has been duly ratified by the Government of Colombia, and the exchange of ratifications will probably take place within a few months.

ECUADOR.

The assassination of President Garcia Moreno, which occurred at Guayaquil on the 6th of August, 1875, has been followed by a long period of political disturbance in Ecuador. The United States minister was withdrawn from Quito in 1876, and diplomatic relations have been practically suspended since that time. Recently, however, the Government of Ecuador has expressed a desire to renew relations with the United States, and has appointed a minister to represent it at Washington. I have responded favorably to this friendly overture, and have accredited a minister to Ecuador.

PERU.

The long pending claims of citizens of the United States against Peru have been the subject of correspondence between the two Governments, and I am hopeful that a settlement may be reached which will be honorable to both countries.

CHILE.

The relations between the United States and Chile have been of the most friendly character during the civil war which has prevailed in the latter country. The sympathies of the people of the United States were warmly with the people of Chile in their struggle for constitutional government, and the prompt recognition of the belligerent rights of the successful party by this Government was followed by the establishment of friendly relations with the new administration. The unfortunate controversy between Chile and Peru, which led to the war between those countries, has been the cause of much embarrassment to the United States, as well as to other neutral powers. The blockade of Peruvian ports by Chilean vessels of war, and the consequent cessation of trade between neutral ports and the ports of Peru, have been the source of much loss to the commerce of the United States, which has been in no way responsible for the war. Our efforts have been constantly directed to the restoration of peace between the belligerents, and to the reestablishment of friendly relations between them and the United States. The prospect of peace is now more favorable than at any time since the war began, and I hope that the present negotiations between Chile and Peru may result in a permanent settlement of the questions which have been the cause of the war.

BRAZIL.

The revolution in Brazil against the established Government has terminated. While it was in progress it became necessary to enforce our neutrality laws by instituting proceedings against those who were charged with violating them. The chief of the provisional government has been duly recognized.

TAHITI ON BOUNDS OF ACT.

Much anxiety has lately been displayed by various European Governments, especially in the southern part of Italy, for the purpose of an import duties on works of art. Mr. Robinson (New York) has prepared a characteristic resolution for a return to Jeffersonian simplicity in the ceremonies attending the inauguration. It provides that there shall be permitted no display of bayonets or other arms on that occasion, and there shall be no decorations or display other than the American flag, and the chief justice of the supreme court and the president-elect shall either walk or ride to the capitol together in a carriage, drawn by not more than two horses, and without any display of livery, where the oath of office shall be administered in the presence of all who desire to be present.

The Harbor Springs Independent says that Capt. Cryssler will have the upper works of the Gracie Barker remodeled this winter. She will have her upper deck extended forward, and the space forward of the boiler room will be housed in. This will give her much better accommodations for carrying freight, and will increase her sea going qualities. The pilot house will be raised to the upper deck, which will be strengthened and arranged for the accommodation of passengers in fair weather. The upper deck will be protected by rope bulwarks similar to those on the Frank. If the contemplated changes are made by good workmen the appearance of the Barker will be materially improved.

The editor of the Petoskey Record labors through a half column of discussion of the question of southern control of democracy, and sums it up by saying "still it is a matter of opinion." It is not wholly a matter of opinion. The South are not all fools. They know well enough that the democracy of the north will not permit the overthrow of the goverment in the manner set up by the Record. They know that the democracy of the north is loyal, and will vote regardless of party name to destroy any hydra that may arise. We trust that President Cleveland will represent the independent element in Congress which stands as the balance of power. If he does he will only carry out the principles on which he was elected, that of progress and reform. If he does not, he will betray the party which elected him to the important office of chief executive of sixty millions of free people.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

A Glance at the Stock of Dr. G. W. Crouter.

The times are never so hard that people cannot or will not buy presents for Christmas. Of course when money is scarce, as it is this winter, the tendency is to invest more in useful or necessary goods than in the purely ornamental.

Anticipating the "times," Dr. Crouter made his selections this year to combine the useful and ornamental in a large variety of articles. His books include Bibles in rich and elegant covers, finely illustrated poems in migntor covers (the latest designs), juvenile books from the richest to the cheapest, as well as a large line of standard literature. In albums, the large stock embraces a wide range in quality and price. Rich and elegant perfume cases with cut glass bottles, make no small part of the display. Plush goods, in toilet cases, mirrors, broom holders, etc., fill one case with samples. Solid white and colored glass paper weights; china goods, in bread and milk, and water sets; vases: a fine assortment of writing desks, and many other just such articles combine the useful and ornamental in a noticeable degree. In the stock may be found all the latest and leading games, and as large a line of wax, indistructible, and other dolls as was ever brought to Charlevoix. Christmas cards may be classed as almost purely ornamental, but this stock includes the richest and latest designs. Notwithstanding the "times" the Doctor says some of his best cards are already sold. People of artistic tastes should not fail to look them over. In toys, the mammoth "Christmas tree" in the center of the store cautains everything for the little folks, in value from one cent to one dollar. The store contains numberless other articles not here named, suitable for holiday presents. In addition to the goods in stock, he has made several orders of rich and expensive goods for people who are able to buy,—goods too expensive to keep in stock for the trade of this county. This he is enabled to do with the aid of his very complete catalogues from wholesale houses in Chicago and other large cities.

While the trade may not aggregate as much as in some previous years, it has been very satisfactory, and Dr. Crouter will be quite sure to get his share of what is going.

American Shipping.

Considerable importance is attached to a resolution which Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, has introduced in Congress, and intends to call up at the first opportunity. It reads:

WHEREAS, The shipping trade in American vessels is depressed, and the export trade in American produce languishing for want of a market that might be reached if the shipping trade was in the hands of citizens of the United States; therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on finance be and is hereby directed to inquire whether it be expedient to expend the surplus revenue of the United States, or any portion thereof, for the purpose of reviving the export trade, by allowing a rebate from tariff duties on foreign goods imported in ships built and owned in the United States, and by also allowing a premium on American grown produces and articles of American manufacture exported in American vessels, and report by bill or otherwise.

Cogent Reasons for Pharmaceutical Legislation.

President Crouter presents the following concise reasons for the enactment of a pharmacy bill:

To the Editor of the Tradesman:

MY DEAR SIR—Allow me to extend to you the thanks of the Michigan State Pharmaceutial Association for your kind and very liberal offer of the free use of the columns of your excellent journal to discuss any matter pertaining to the welfare of the druggists and other citizens of this state.

We have a pharmacy bill to present to our next legislature—one that demands the attention of every citizen of the state.

It is a bill for the protection of the public from the dangers attending the dispensing of medicines by unscrupulous and incompetent men.

It is a bill that requires every druggist to educate himself for the important position of compounding medicines for the people.

It is a bill requiring all druggists to keep a careful record of the poisons they sell, and to see that every package of poison sold is properly labeled.

It is a bill to prevent the adulteration of any drug, medicine, chemical or pharmaceutical preparation.

It is not a bill in the interest of any class or profession of men.

It is a bill endorsed by our state school of pharmacy and in any case it is one of the most important bills the people of our state that will be passed upon by our next legislature.

Our state has provided a system to educate druggists, and now the people require every person to be duly elected before attempting to dispense poison to the public and dealing with human life.

Yours truly,

G. W. CROUTER.

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

THE second session of the Forty-eighth Congress opened at Washington on Monday, Dec. 1. Promptly at noon of that day the President of the senate called that body to order, prayer was offered, and word was sent over to the House that the upper house was ready to proceed to business. Messrs. Sherman and Garland were appointed a committee to inform the President that the Senate was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make. Mr. Pelton introduced a bill to prohibit dueling in being made in the military service of the United States, notice of a democratic caucus for Saturday evening, and then the Senate adjourned till Monday. In the House Mr. Randall moved to proceed to the election of Speaker, and he was unanimously chosen by the Democratic members, the Clerk was directed to notify the Senate that the House was ready to proceed to business. The Speaker announced Messrs. Randall and Cox, of New York, a committee to wait upon the President to inform him that a quorum of the House had been elected and to inform the Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make. Mr. Hiscock presented the credentials of Mr. Seelye, elected to fill the Thirteenth Indiana District, to serve out the unexpired term of Mr. Cumback, who died while holding the office. After being sworn in the reading of the President's message to the House was begun.

MR. VANCE offered a resolution in the Senate, on the 3d inst., directing an investigation into all the leases of land in Indian Territory by Indian tribes. After a long debate the matter went over. Mr. Hawley introduced a bill appropriating quite a large sum for the relief of the officers and crew of the wrecked Talaska. The House adopted a resolution presented by Mr. Follett, of Ohio, for an investigation into the conduct of Lieut. Wright, married at Thebmark, and his armed deputies at the October election. Mr. Garza called up the Commerce Committee's interstate-commerce bill, and offered as a substitute what is generally known as the Reagan bill. Mr. Reagan entered into an elaborate argument in favor of his measure, and the further debate on the bill was postponed. The facts that it provides a quarter chance for shorter than for longer hauls for the same quantity of freight; that it gives complete legal, equitable and prompt remedies to the citizen for every injury inflicted on him by the railroads; and that it absolutely prohibits pooling, instead of merely directing the commission to inquire into the method of pooling and report what legislation is needed on the subject. Action on the matter is substitute was deferred by the adjournment.

A BILL to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar, and providing that there shall be no recoinage of United States notes of a denomination less than $5, was introduced in the House on the 3d inst., by Mr. Morrison, of New Jersey. The bill proposes that silver dollars shall be coined only upon presentation by the Treasurer, the Assistant Treasurers and designated depositaries of the bullion of land made by Indians in the Territory, and then only in payment to the same extent as the amount of the bullion may be purchased by the Government. The resolution was then agreed to. Mr. Slater gave notice of his intention to take up the bill declaring forfeited the unearned lands granted to aid in the construction of the Oregon Central Railroad. The House, on motion of Mr. Cobb, of Indiana, declined to accept the Senate's amendments to the House bill forfeiting the unearned lands of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company. The House went into committee of the whole on the bill making temporary provision for the naval service. Mr. Hiscock stated that the preparation for the support of the navy for the current fiscal year was $1,500,000, and asked for $250,000 on last year's appropriation. The bill was passed without amendment. Consideration of the interstate commerce bill was resumed. Mr. Stewart, a member of the Commerce Committee, supported the bill. He thought Congress could exercise such authority as it chose with the bill. Mr. Hoge, on the other hand, contended that the bill was unconstitutional. Mr. Reagan followed in support of the measure, and the House adjourned.

IN an interview with a newspaper correspondent at Albany, Gov. Cleveland is reported as saying:

"I am not engaged in making Cabinets at the present time, the newspapers notwithstanding. My time is continuously broken in upon by officious people from all parts of the country. I am glad to meet them, and I doubt if any of them cordially like the blasts, the suggestions, the cheap-shots and the officiousness of callers with which they and I am frequently rolled together in the lobbies of the newspaper correspondents. As for example, your reported interview with Mr. Hendricks? I interviewed the correspondent. "Ah, as to that," said the Governor, his face clouding as he spoke, "it was not exactly fides, it was newspaperous and unlicensed. A man could go to sleep and dream of nothing more utterly, wholly false than that. I doubt, if two men, comparatively strangers, could ever give the matter a more cordial greeting than was the greeting between Hendricks and myself. We came together for barely fifteen minutes, and our intercourse was more than friendly. It was warm and theoretically cordial. I will not complain of any picture which any man chooses to draw of me from personal observation. If the visitor has correspondents to say that I wore a No. 3 hat and No. 9 shoes he is at liberty to say so. But I never question, when I believe his course to be based in good taste, but when words are put into my mouth which I never uttered, and when I am accredited with statements which I never made, I feel that I have a right to it. We are no need to that sort of thing here. I shall not permit it. I have had the slightest disposition to shout in mystery anything touching my official life. I will act with my future course. There need be no guessing about it. It seems to me that Congressman That calls upon me at about lunch-no-lunch time for entertainment for the actors' fund at New York netted $40,000. President-elect Cleveland, who came from Albany to attend the performance, was the chief amusement, and his reception by the vast audience was very enthusiastic. Mr. Cleveland's box was guarded by the police, for the purpose of excluding interviewers and public clans.

MR. MITCHELL introduced a bill in the Senate, on the 4th inst., giving a pension of $5,000 a year to Gen. Grant. Mr. Cameron submitted a resolution to the effect that the Finance Committee be directed to inquire whether it shall be expedient to expend a portion of the surplus revenue for the purpose of relieving the subsidize and export trade by means of remitting the duties on articles and goods imported in ships built and owned in the United States, and employed in the American carrying trade. The interstate commerce bill was then taken up and discussed at length until the 11th. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Thomas A. E. Weadley, of Ohio, Comptroller of the Currency; Clarke, of Rhode Island, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; Latham, of Pennsylvania, Assistant Commissioner General of the Land Office; Lucius Lamar Knight, of Georgia, Minister of Alabama, to reside at Siam; George F. Seward, of Pennsylvania, to reside at Corea; Chester Sockey, of California, to reside at Hawaii. The Senate confirmed William F. Vilas, of Wisconsin, member of the National Board of Health; Hugh McCulloch, of Indiana, Secretary of the Treasury; John Schuyler Crosby, of New York, Assistant Postmaster General; and in the House, Mr. Morrison introduced a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchasing bullion in the Treasury in sums of $2,000,000 per month, and coining it into silver dollars. The House then resumed consideration of the interstate commerce bill. Mr. Anderson opposed it, and Mr. Richardson, of Mr. Reagan, thought he did not think its provisions would be found practical. Mr. Blount believed its course to be based in good taste;

How The Dram Shop Helps Business.

PROF. GEORGE E. FOSTER, M. P.

The sale of intoxicating liquors has long since lost all claim to public support on moral and social considerations. Intelligent and good men are unanimous in declaring it a nuisance in both these respects. Today the sole ground on which it appears for a legal existence is the financial consideration. "Business will be injured" if the sale of liquor is prohibited; and this cry, as baseless as it is foolish, is echoed by both defenders and apologists of a cruel and destructive tariff, which not only preys upon every legitimate business, but paralyzes in myriad instances those for whom and by whom business exists. If we think carefully over this whole matter we shall easily arrive at the following underlying principles:

(a) Trade or business is due to the relationship of demand and supply. People need certain things; other people set themselves to supply those needs, and thus trade springs up, and business is transacted. If people needed nothing, then there would be nothing to be supplied, and consequently no business would be done, but we need clothes, food, houses, books, tools, furniture; and immediately, in order to supply these, the whole business of clothes making, food producing, house building, etc., etc., springs into activity.

(b) For the sake of convenience trade centers in villages, towns and cities, and people go thither for what they need, and find others there ready to supply them. They exchange or buy and sell, and thus trade thrives and prospers.

(c) The business done will be exactly in proportion to the amount that people want and are able to pay for. If one wants $100 worth of clothes and can pay for them, the clothier and he will do just that amount of business. If not, then they will do less, and similarly with all other transactions.

(d) Business is "helped" when the demand for articles is increased, when the ability to pay for them is made greater, and when the production of them is made easy and cheap. Business is "injured" when the demand is lessened, the ability to pay diminished, and the cost of production increased.

In the foregoing principles, the following propositions are clearly of the utmost importance:

1 The dram shop decreases the demand for legitimate articles of trade. The great staples of trade are what is eaten, worn or used to live in and work with. If the dram shop really "helps" business it must make people eat more, wear more, and use more buildings and tools. But experience proves the very reverse of this to be true. It is the work of the dram shop to teach men to tipple and drink, and the loss is a rule, they are able to purchase in the way of food, clothes, houses, and implements. The demand for drink increases, and must be satisfied though the family goes without the requisite supply of bread, clothes and the usual comforts of home. As the dram shop gets hold of a man—the provider for a family—the baker and butcher, the grocer and clothier, the tinsmith and bookseller, and all traders sell him less and less. The bottle is sent out for whisky where formerly the basket went for bread and meat.

Suppose a trader has a full variety store, and has fifty sober working men with families for his customers. These will spend on an average $300 each with the trader, and so he will do a business of $15,000 per year. Now let the dram shop come, and teach all those to tipple and drink. Will the fifty tippling workmen take more or as much from the trader's store as they did when sober? Nay, but they will now spend on an average $50 a year in the dram shop, and therefore have but $250 to spend with the trader, and his business shrinks from $15,000 to $12,500. The dram shop lessens the demand for the trader's wares and increases the demand for strong drink. The dram shop is therefore, a constant and deadly enemy to business inasmuch as always and inevitably it decreases the demand for the legitimate articles of trade.

2 The dram shop decreases the purchasing capacity of the people. It is quite plain that the purchasing capacity of a community is measured by its earning power. How then does the dram shop affect the earning power of a community?

The first result of the dram is to cause a loss of time, and it operates. Men spend hours at tippling, when they ought to be at work. Men pass days or spoon and carouse, when they ought to be at their trade. Men lose a whole week on account of drinking, and are for days and weeks with no employment, and for that nothing. Suppose in a town you have two hundred workingmen, earning $4.00 per day, their aggregate earnings are $800 per day, or $4,800 per week. Now, if dram shops are set up in this town, and one half of the workers learn to tipple and drink, and lose on an average one day per week, the earnings amount to $350 less per week, or $7,500 less per year. In Great Britain it is estimated that the labor power losses one day in every six on account of drunkenness.

Whence comes the loungers and loafers, and tramps that congregate on our streets, or roam our country? They are nine cases out of ten, the idle graduates of the dram shop.

Whence come the hosts of "drunk and disorderlies," who not only do not earn corn, but who live at the expense of earners, in our jails and prisons? Why are these not at work? The dram shops have ruined them, and turned them from earners into non-earners.

Whence come the violent, abusive, thieves, vagrants and murderers? Official statistics tell us that seventy-five per cent of them are the result of drink, and the dram shop is the mill in which drink grinds down its victims from honest, sober, orderly, and industrious citizens into criminals of every grade. Close the dram shops, keep people sober and industrious, and the earning power, and with it the trade of the country would be vastly increased.

Step by step the leading food products of Europe are being reproduced in this country. Macaroni is made by Italians in New York. Neuchatel cheese by Swiss in New Jersey, Schweizer kase by Germans in Ohio, Albert biscuit by Englishman in Albany, and caviare by Russians in Harlem. Nearly all of these are exported to Europe, and there sold as domestic manufactures.

The judicious planting of eucalyptus trees has been recommended by Baron Von Mueller as a means of increasing and maintaining the water supply of Austria. Parts of an ancient human skull have been found by Dr. M. Barcena in a hard siliceous limestone near the border of lake Tezcuco, Mexico. The limestone, whose origin is unknown, is covered with a deposit made by the water of the lake, and it is evident that since the encasement of the sand both the rock and the material about it have been elevated several feet precisely by the erosion which projected an empirical hill near the locality.

A plan of accurately measuring the temperature of a distant station by electricity has been described by Dr. R. Lenz. Two wires—one of silver and one of iron, or one of antimony and one of bismuth—connect the observer with the distant place, and any variations in the cool loops of the wires as regards temperature causes a sound in a telephone, which ceases when the temperature at the observer's loop is brought to the same point as that of the opposite end—which may be miles away.

Oxygen Cheaply Liquified.—In a note to the French Academy of Sciences, Mons. Cailletet has communicated a plan for producing liquid oxygen which is so simple that it is expected that the product may soon become an article of commerce, as is ethyl carbonic acid now is in Germany. He states that when the gas known as fermene is slightly condensed and cooled in the liquid ethylene under intense hydraulic pressure, it is resolved into an extremely volatile coolness fluid, and this fluid, in remaining to regain its state, reveals a degree of cost sufficient to immediately liquefy oxygen.

Those that delight in "tripping the light fantastic toe," have had many privileges recently.

The young people purpose getting up a Christmas tree to be held in Bowman's hall, on Christmas eve.

Behold it cometh to pass, that the time draweth nigh that the young lady spends away to the fancy store, then lieth away to the nethermost chamber, and from her fair fingers emerges a scarf of no mean proportions, which shall grace the neck of the favored swain. He also saveth his small change and straightway goeth to the livery man and procureth a beast with which they will speed away before the admiring eyes of others less fortunate. Yet "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

Historical Society.

The society held a brief session Tuesday evening listening only to Mrs. Cook's excellent paper, and adjourning only to allow the members to attend the surprise party at Mr. Buttars'.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

Large Gathering of Friends to Say Good Bye to Lieutenant Governor-elect Buttars.

It having been announced that Lieutenant Governor Buttars would in a few days close his house and go to Lansing to remain until the close of the session of the legislature, a surprise party was planned for Tuesday evening, to give his many friends an opportunity to bid him good-bye. The place and hour of gathering was fixed at the Bridge Street house at 8:30, and the Historical society which held its session there, adjourned in time to head the party. The night was fearful stormy, but enough attended to completely fill the house.

Archie was found in his shirt sleeves and "old clothes," and seemed astonished to meet so many people there at that hour. But he was not long in making them all comfortable.

E. H. Green called the house to order, and suggested that, in the absence of the president or president pro tem of the village, some one be selected as master of ceremonies. He was promptly named for the place. A program had been prepared as follows:

Music, by the Glee Club.

Opening address, by E. H. Green. As president of the historical society, he extended the congratulations of the society, on the election of a member of that body to the second highest office in the gift of the state of Michigan.

Oath of office administered by W. A. Smith, notary public.

A. D. Cruickshank responded to the sentiment, "the democracy," referring in a happy manner to the fact that no matter how bitter the partisanship before election, after it is settled all join in wishing the victor a pleasant and prosperous term of office.

The needs of the medical profession was discussed by Dr. Carlstein.

Miss Orser and Mr. Bradbeer gave a musical selection.

Fred W. Mayne pointed out the relations between Mr. Buttars and the legal fraternity and suggested that he deal gently with them.

As an old resident Robert Miller recalled many incidents in the life of Mr. Buttars during his stay in Charlevoix.

"The press" was responded to by W. A. Smith.

Mr. Buttars having been a merchant in his early days here, E. M. Clark discussed his relationship to that business.

In discussing "the republican party" Dr. Graves gave a characteristic republican address.

On behalf of the church Rev. J. T. Iddings advised a constant recollection of Mr. Buttars' position in the church, and a monishing of laws at all times to meet the requirements of people as Christians.

Mr. Buttars made a feeling response to the addresses, touching the many misgivings he has had during the campaign and since the election; and promising on his part to endeavor to merit the continued good will of his fellow citizens.

After another selection by the Glee Club, the company made themselves comfortable for a short time, when another august body "the masonic fraternity—helped to pack the already crowded parlors. In behalf of that body A. R. Upright W. M. made a brief address, to which Mr. Buttars made response, thanking them for their presence on this occasion.

The best wishes of our people go with Mr. Buttars during his sojourn in Lansing.

Two of a Kind.

Did you ever notice a catfish snubbing his way along the mouth of a creek? How he noses his way sowly along up the little inlets, along bits of driftwood, around chunks of coal, says Bob Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle. He never hurries, doesn't often appear to find anything, isn't particularly anxious to keep in the shade, doesn't seem to care very much whether you see him or not, he just saunts along the shore, idly, noiselessly, with never a splasher a ripple; he nibbles at some inedible nuisance once in a while and then abandons it, drifts on a little farther, finds a worm or a bug, swallows it with the air of a fish who has found what he has been searching for along five miles of coast line, and disappears into deep water.

Now, do you know the catfish develops into a man? Here is a field for Mr. Darwin. Any warm, very warm, summer day on the Ohio river, when the water is low enough to be yellow, you can see the man who is evolved from the catfish. He has a low skiff, usually square at each end; it isn't exactly a scow, it looks as though he intended to make it sumptuous, but lacked energy enough to draw the sides quite to either. It is the simplest skiff on the river. A hard rain or a sweeping freshet makes it dirtier. The cowpecks are bits of sugar-cane, bits of wood, anything that will float that boat will hunt for days for a bit of growing timber the right size rather than whittle down a piece of hickory. He rows along the still river with the motions and the instincts of a catfish. He never hurries. His oars drop into the water without a splash, and he softly raises them without a ripple. He noses his way along the bank. The spectacle of this man rowing down the middle of the stream is as unknown as a picnic. Sometimes he wants to cross over to the other shore, but then he rows very rapidly in a bee-line, the only time he is ever known to make any exertion. Along the shore is his favorite haunt, and here he and the catfish are twins, and he the dirtier and lazier. He peddles suspiciously up to bits of driftwood, occasionally hauling some broken plank aboard his craft. He has a slingshh but wary eye for floating casks and kegs; like the other catfish he eyes floating bits of the things he inspects, and what he accepts seems to give him very little pleasure. You never meet either of this party in clear water or on cold days. But if the sun is hot, the water muddy, a sense of malaria present in the adjacent swamps you may wander along the bank of the river and look for the catfish snubbing along in the shore. And when you have found him, lift up your eyes and lo, the man in the boat is not one hundred yards away. And you will wonder which of the twain evolved the other.

Gathering Grapes.

It is sometimes recommended that the grapes should be gathered as they ripen, by going over a vineyard two or three times and picking off not only bunches that are ripe, leaving the green ones, but even picking off separately three or four grapes from each bunch where it is not evenly ripened; and this is the practice that is followed to-day in making the finest white wines of France and Germany; but it will certainly not be adopted in California while labor is so dear and wine as cheap as it is at present. Instead, that practice will be followed which is recommended by those writers who advise that the grapes of each variety be left on the vines till they are all fairly ripe, and that they be gathered clean at one picking. Where, however, different varieties are planted in the same vineyard, which ripen at different periods, those only should be picked at the same time which ripen together.—California Wine Press.

Something akin to free love flourishes in Anam. Ordinarily wedlock is governed by the usual Chinese rules, and few of the couples living together are legally married. If a woman fancies a stranger she lives with him and does not lose caste. When the residence becomes irksome they separate, and if children have been born they are amicably divided. A child assumes the name of the parent who takes charge of it. In the villages and country districts of the lower portion of Cochinchi[illegible]nists. The head of the family is bound to offer a male guest the choice of his unmarried daughters. This is only a common politeness. In the mountain districts excess is sent who consider sex as symbolic of the divinity, and who perpetrate obscenities in their temples.

Amos Morris, of Danbury, Conn., calls for back pension for services in the war of 1812.

FIRE PROTECTION.

What Are You Going to Do About It?

There is no end to grumblings at the inefficency of our fire protection. One portion of our people curse the department because they do not do better work with the engine; another portion will curse the engineer because the engine will not always work; another portion curse the village council because they do not provide something better; and so on through the list,—everyone of them not forgetting also to curse their high taxes.

Now what are you going to do about it? Not one of the many grumblers will go to the engine house once a week, or once a month to work the brakes for an hour to keep in practice; not one of them will take any interest in the department, for the glory of it; not one of them will lift a hand in time of need, but all stand back and croak. A man must be paid for his time and expenses and held responsible for results, before he will give much attention to such matters. And the council cannot now appropriate any great sum to keep up the department. The croakers themselves would repudiate them at the ballot box at the next election. The council will appropriate for fire protection, all that is necessary if the people will sustain them. They will buy steam engines and build water works if the people will pay the bills. But all these cost money,—lots of it. The sentiment of the people is against it. They will refuse to foot the bills.

Before we can have any very effective fire protection the people must make up their mind to pay for it. This is the experience of every town and city in Michigan. Too many of them wait until they sacrifice hundreds of thousands in property. Will Charlevoix do the same? The people must say. The present department cannot. The council cannot without the support of the people who must pay the bills.

What are you going to do about it.

Notice to Contractors.

Miles Eaton, director, until January 1, 1885, for furnishing to the village of Charlevoix, Mich., said wood to be four feet long, sawed or split, and delivered, piled and corded in the village of Charlevoix, on or before the 3rd day of March, 1885. JOHN NICHOLLS,

CHARLEVOIX,

A TRUE STORY.

BY ABBY FINCH.

Where's the baby, grandmamma?
The smart young mother calls
From her work by the cozy kitchen fire,
With its shiny white-washed walls,
And pinafore leaves her knitting,
And looks for her all around,
But not a trace of baby dear
Can anywhere be found.

Grandmamma peacefully smiles,
As gleam of memory runs
To parties of days long fled by,
And answers in measured tones,
All time's to the baby given,
I'm not left to the child,
They soon learn each nook and corner,
The mischief-loving elf.

And the mother cries (very pallid,
Grandmamma sees it, she sighs,
The baby has come to the village,
Now's to look for her joys,
And the baby she's left. Where's Bessie?
The mother's heart-cry is shrill.
Oh, the child is in the orchard,
Where the curls used to climb.

Where's Bessie? Here's the child for her!
Lassie! In a cherry tree!
Her basket upon the orchard wall,
And there, on the moss-grown wall,
Close to the well for Bessie,
Hi Bibo, to baby cries,
Some how, between the two of them
The village is in perfect tradesmen!

The children feel their freedom,
And leaves hold no fears
And never heed the sticks
The mother has found.
Grandmamma, the child,
Laughter and shrill cries,
Which mingle in baby sound.

Bessie and child to the store,
She can't be trusted alone,
Mamma doesn't look for them,
And baby knows not to go,
And Bessie to meet them,
And down the lane to
Away on another horse!
Oh! who is rescuing me

The mother heard her, saying
My darling, such a deed,
Never, never more let me do that
And she to kiss it was fond!
Bessie knows baby now has,
But a confusion made to lose!
Grandma to handle back the bread
Who found more on good
Mamma knows.

MR. GILFIL'S MANŒUVER.

BY M. C., VIRGINIA.

It was a regular rush.

Not once of the clear two hundred had seen anyone but to the last man and the last woman had put in an appearance. And the result was something unprecedented even to habitual party goers.

Mr. Gilfil, Junior, had returned from a two years' absence in Europe, unmarried, voted the whole thing a "dead bore," as he concisely recorded the bored mail he stepped and made his way to the gentlemen's dressing room.

A man in waiting, hastened to his assistance.

"I am all right, sir, and that," asked Mr. Gilfil, Junior.

Right as a trivet, sir, said the chief constable, for we never, never, never on record had such a party as this. Why, the Bellridge ball in its palmiest days never had such a success as this."

"Then get me some," said Mr. Gilfil, Junior, "and be quick about it, for I'm awfully thirsty

How The Dram Shop Helps Business.

PROF. GEORGE E. FOSTER, M. P.

2. The dram shop cripples the productive power of every industry. Here is a factory employing five hundred hands. The raw material comes in, the finished article goes out and supplies the wants of society. When does the factory do its best work? When the hands are industrious, steady and skilful. Whatever assists in these respects helps the factory.

A provision store is set up near by. Good, for now the men will get their food cheap, convenient, and of excellent quality, and thus be helped.

A clothier's establishment is provided. Good, for now the men get serviceable clothes with least expenditure of money and time, and so are helped.

A doctor opens an office. Good, for now the men can have advice and attendance, and thus be helped to get well and keep well.

A school house and church are built close by, and give guarantee that the moral and intellectual wants of the men will be looked after. The factory welcomes all these and does better work for their assistance.

Now the dram shop comes, eagerly desirous, of course, to help the factory. What results? Does it supply any raw material, any new machinery for the factory, any food, clothes, or comfort for the men, any stimulus to noble ambition and honest effort?

None whatever. The dram shop does not deal in such things. It simply opens its bar, dealings its drinks, beckons, morning noon and night, to the passing workmen, and with siren voice invites them in. It grinds its music, flashes its lights, proffers its games, and allures the workmen from the home of rest or his place of labor. One after another obeys its ripples and drinks; the habit grows, the appetite forms, disorder increases, ca-reer-al become the order; loss of time, drunken debauch and crime follow. There is a loss in the industry, steadiness and skill of the workmen; the work is confused, lags in department after department, and in a little time the factory curses the dram shop as its worst enemy. So with every productive industry. Keep the dram shop away, and it does its best work; place the dram shop by its side and its best work is impossible.

The dram is the enemy of every productive industry, its whole influence tends to hinder, demoralize, confuse and defeat the best possible results of factory, foundry and farm.

3. The dram shop hinders business with heavy taxes. Business is always better, other things being equal, when it is most lightly taxed. Heavy taxes drive away business. Take your tax bill and count its items:

Item 1. For schools. "A just fair tax," you say, and pay it willingly. As you grow more intelligent, your property increases, and property is safer.

Item 2. For fire department. Just check a moment. How many fires occur from drunken carelessness. A servant from from the dram shop staggers into a barn or out house and tries to light his pipe. A blaze starts and before it is put out thousands of dollars lost, and so much expense to the fire department. Much greater portion of your fire tax to the credit of the dram shop.

Item 3. For poor. Ninety out of every one hundred paupers and criminal poor are so because of the dram shop. Mark ninety per cent of your poor tax to that institution.

Item 4. For police. What constitutes the main work of the police in our towns and cities? Looking after the drunken sots and their prototypes Vineland, with twelve thousand people pays only one hundred dollars per year for police. Why? Vineland has no dram shop for the last twenty-one years. Mark a large part of your tax for police to the dram shop.

Item 5. For criminal expense. When one comes on criminals. The expenses of judges, sheriffs, a grand jurors, and the investigations of parliaments and legislatures, got upon just seventy five per cent of punishable criminals are gratuitous dram-shop. Credit a large part of your tax for criminal expenses to that institution. Now, what have you? A dram shop standing out staring you in the face, and the dram shop helps business. Every cent it costs at least three times as much as the taxes it pays and then it does not here and there and there a ruin, a blot and a fire among it.

It corrupts and destroys [illegible] and business of [illegible] and his family? The farmers and business men of this country. He has produced nothing and given nothing valuable in return for the two thousand dollars. He is an able bodied pauper.

Suppose Smith sets up a bar; stands behind it from January to December; takes in two thousand dollars, and gives out nothing but whiskey. Who has kept Smith and his family? The farmers and business men of the country. He has produced nothing, and given nothing valuable in return for the two thousand dollars. He is an able bodied pauper.

What is difference between the two? Jones was considerate enough to take his living for no return, and harmed nobody. Smith was not contented with simply taking his living but harmed everybody he could. If he had given brown paper instead of whiskey, he would have been as innocent a man as Jones. Jones was a harmless pauper, Smith was a destructive pauper that is all the difference.

Is it good for the business of the country that it has to support ten thousand able bodied men and their families, and, in addition, to bear the burden of taxation and ruin they impose?

"But," say the dram sellers, "you are not fair; do you not see that we must eat, wear clothes, have houses built, and so are continually buying and helping trade? Surely our custom is something, and there are ten thousand of us in Canada?"

Wouldn't you eat and wear clothes, and live in houses if you were not dram sellers? Surely, you don't mean to say that you would then go about naked, or become "Tramps," or live in the caves. And would not your custom be just as good in all those respects then as now? Now you impoverish whole families; do you eat enough to make up to the market what these families must do without?

Now several go in rags, bee use you get their money. Do you wear several suits at a time so as to make up the loss to trade?

Now, men have to live in hovels, because you get their money for drink; do you live half a dozen houses at once in order to make up the deficiency?

Go to! Close up your dram shops, and yet you will eat and wear clothes and live in houses. The only difference will be that you will be honestly earning what you eat, wear and live in. You will be filling the land, making good shoes, raising good grain, manufacturing serviceable goods, and hurting nobody in the operation.

Better yet. You will be giving society something over and above your living, which helps it, enriches it, deadens its numbness, and increases its virtues, instead of, as now, turning its sober citizens into idlers, paupers, and criminals.

Oddity in Designs.

The demand for brica-brac and novelties in household decoration apparently does not abate, and there is such a pressure for novelties that designers in all parts of the world from Boston to Yokohama are kept busy rushing their inventions so to the last degree to turn out new combinations. Every manufacturer who caters to this taste in any way keeps a designer, whose ears are hardened with the demand for something new. An old shoe or an old hat give an idea for a bric-brac case. Every animal in the menagerie is immortalized by various artisans. Botany, as well as zoology, is ransacked for designs, and all the combinations apparently possible are made. Nevertheless, there seems to be no limit to the fertility of the designer. In referring to this subject a bric-a-brac dealer, with an idle quarter of an hour on his hands, consulted a reporter through his collection, and as he went along the counters he said:

"There is a lamp that has the form of a white owl, from whose head rises the stem of an immense rose with closely folded leaves, which entirely conceal the globe. There is a stork in flight, with its wings spread out and its legs extended. It is ornamented, and is to be suspended from the chandelier by invisible threads. There is a candlestick with a gold grape leaf for its base, and with a light receiver of crystal, printed in gold. There is a wreath in the form of a skull, and another, with a moss-covered top full of artificial plants, is in the shape of a flower pot. There is a big elephant of porcelain, with an awning in its back for begonias, and there is a porcelain vase representing a tree trunk overgrown with climbing plants. There is a mirror to be surrounded with cut flowers, and to represent a miniature lake in the center of a dinner table. That crystal ball mounted upon a spiral pedestal is for a center-table ornament to catch and reflect the light. That glass screen has, you observe, pond lilies painted upon it so that they seem to be floating in water. The curiously-twisted horns in that smoking set come from Eagle Pass, Tex., and are cimaron horns. The other horns are from the heads of buffaloes. They are mounted in Paris and sent back here. The stranger is a paperweight, and its smooth forms a thermometer. That cat is an inkstand. The head is a lifting bonnet is the same. Lift the face, and there is the inkwell. That goat-and-herd table will silver it, and a carriage is dressed in Austrian glass, in chapter set. Here is a fish-carriage that represents a slipper lined with plush, and here is another slipper lined in coarse. That tree of gold, with a nest for eggs, is for next Easter. That grandfather's clock contains a Geneva timepiece, and this one has a clock on one side, a barometer on the other, a thermometer between, and a geographical globe above. That stork, raising itself within a nest formed to seize a long, supports a thermometer, and that setter dog, with a bird in his mouth, holds up a barometer. This gilded key, with a pair of brazen dragons in the ring, is a common and popular fancy for a thermometer now. Those three Parisian pipes form a newspaper rack. Here are designs for open fireplaces, for, after all, there is no brica-brac to compare with a bright open fire. And so the variety increases. There is no end to the designs. The designers are chiefly European, who are worked at high pressure all the time."—New York Sun.

A wild man, captured in Ochecee Swamp, near Chattahoochee, and carried to Tallahassee, had been swimming in Ochecee Lake, from island to island, and when taken was entirely destitute of clothing, emaciated and entirely covered with a phenomenal growth of hair. He could give no account of himself, and the theory is that he escaped from an asylum in some other state.

Mr. Blaine has addressed the following letter to his attorneys, instructing them to dismiss the libel suit for damages for libel against the Indianapolis Sentinel, which he instituted during the recent campaign:

Messrs. Baldwin, Miller & Elam, Counselors at Law:

GENTLEMEN—When I requested you in August last to institute a libel suit in the Superior Court of Indianapolis, Ind., on my behalf, I did so in the belief that the assaults were to be but for a time, being entirely of a personal and demonstrably false character. I could not foresee that in the autumn of non-political considerations, I should be compelled to bring to bear the power of the law to vindicate my character from an attack taken up and the libel propagated by a daily newspaper in that city. Except from the interest I have in the result of the suit, I have no pecuniary motive in the matter. I am willing that the libel suit shall be dismissed, and I desire you to enter such dismissal. I have made no use of the libel suit for political purposes, and I have no intention to do so. I regard the libel as a part of the desperate attempt to defeat the Republican party by the foulest means, and that this party has been defeated by the votes of honest men, and not by the circulation of libels, is to me a source of unspeakable gratification. I am, gentlemen, very truly yours,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

In an Argument vessed from Rio de Janeiro, Trumbull severely attacked the policy of hostilities toward Brazil and the Argentine Republic. The Brazilians have made every effort to maintain peace and are conscripting for their army. The Argentines are credited with a force of 120,000 men.

FOREIGN.

All London was intensely alarmed on Saturday by an attempt to blow up London Bridge with dynamite. The attempt, however, proved a matter failure, as far as the design to demolish the structure was concerned. Bombs and Fenian literature and guns were taken in the vicinity. The bridge itself escaped without injury. A strong hoard palings was put around, and orders sent out to search for the parties who planned the destruction of the bridge, but no arrests were made up to date. Considerable excitement and the fear of a repetition of the explosion, traffic was suspended for a time.

Bismarck was forced to appeal to the Reichstag to give him assistance in the German loan bill offer, saying that in the event of war the Emperor only had 400,000 men in his strength, and that a refusal to comply with his request would embitter his life. Notwithstanding this strong language, the proposition to create a second directorship was lost by 186 to 141.

Full confessions were made by some of the Nihilists sentenced at Leipsic for the assassination of Czar Alexander and were published in some of the Berlin papers. The details read were of the most horrible character, and the confessions created a sensation. The trial was closed, and the sentences passed in a few minutes after the Prisoner was escorted to the court room. The sentences were read in full in that the people might be informed of the verdict.

It is rumored that Portugal is about to cede to Germany the Portuguese possessions in Congo Bay, in southeast Africa, prior to Mr. Blaine's house, and who is as well informed as any of the late candidate's friends regarding his views and future intentions, is credited by a Washington correspondent with saying:

Mr. Blaine does not intend to withdraw from political life nor yield up the habit he has on the Republicans of the country. For a few months he will be obliged to give the most of his time to private affairs, but he does so he will continue to watch with active interest the movements of Republican leaders and to urge party political measures and to the encouragement of the Republican party. Mr. Blaine will be the acknowledged leader of the party in the Senate, without losing a detail his right as such to dictate to those who are. In a quiet way, and without much show, he expects to exercise considerable influence in the councils of the party. Whether he will again enter official life is a point yet to be settled, and he will not decide until after he has been inducted into the private walks. He, West are just as devoted to his interests as they were before the election, and many of those say mistakingly that the Republican party has left him will find him to lead the party again, and that this fact must not be lost sight of. Even all sections of the country he has received assurances that the Republican cause will be kept earnest until the next campaign, and that his position in the Republican party will not be smaller that of Mr. Tilden four years ago, when the Democratic party begged him to be its candidate against Garfield. Mr. Blaine realizes that he has fallen upon hard times, Mr. Morgan, the man who have been trusted leaders in the past, and whose confidence they have got a right to expect during the late struggle, but who remained quietly in the background when in behalf of the party, and he does not feel at this time any disposition to call upon the faithful together for a reunion. Whether he will do so in the near future depends upon the course of the people in the next few months. If the country settles down to a permanently advised, and its influence will be felt every northern State in every contest that may come up.

We have been as easy as possible with all, more than we could for our own good. Now we need have some CASH. MISCONSTRUED.

BY ALMA MEEK.

"To-night will you let me be chaste, Captain?"
She cooed, with her bewitching smile.
"So much more of pink than brown,
And such a little cruising sails—
Shall you take the seas?" He cried. "Nay, nay!
Unless it be facing the Cape of May."

"Sir," she chided me, with a bow of her curls,
"Can you be content to wait?
Shall I be taken your fancy's fickle whim?
Let me be
The one all-precious thought
Of your cherished existence!" she pleaded.
"Wait—or I shall fail to be your Mate."

"But I thought that you knew I loved enough
To wait—
Since I'm coming a year or so!
We have cruised on many seas,
The best of friends we could be,
But to-night I sought to possess
The one and only dream of happiness."

She said not a word, but pouted a pout,
And turned her head away.
I had to be firm—I could not weaken—
Nay, nay,
Not in the least could I waver.
Then she left me, and I was alone
With my thoughts of the one I love.

Then I thought of the night I left her,
Of the night I left her alone,
Of the night I left her to wait for me
Till I should come back from the sea.
Then I thought of the night I left her
Of the night I left her alone,
Of the night I left her to wait for me
Till I should come back from the sea.

Then I thought of the night I left her

Girls—alas that they can reform the man they marry—could read a recent decision by the Supreme court of Iowa. It was a divorce case brought by a wife because her husband was a confirmed drunkard. This was not denied, but it was developed in evidence that she knew of his misdemeanor before marriage, but when she married him, and married him hoping to reform him. The judges of the court of final appeal denied her the divorce in these stern words: "You voluntarily chose a drunkard for a husband, and you should discharge the duties of a drunkard's wife. His failure to keep a pledge of reformation made before marriage does not justify you in deserting him. Having knowingly married a drunkard, you must make yourself content with the sacred relation ship." This seems cruel. But girls remember, that you can never reform a man after marriage.

American Literary Women.

The death of Mary Clemmer Hudson is the latest wrench in American authorship. She was at one time the most attractive writer on the Independent, and Bowen has never been able to fill her place. The most interesting feature, however, in her life, is her intimacy with the sisters Alice and Phebe Cary, whose memoirs she gave the world in a very attractive form. The Carys were the most remarkable pair of sisters New York ever contained. They came hither poor and endured great privation while building up a reputation, which eventually brought a competence. They lived, however, long enough to win the admiration of the best intellects of the day, and bore an important part in founding Sorosis, which is the most admirable club in this city. To return to Mrs. Hudson, one is reminded by her death of that brilliant array of female writers which has so recently passed away. Among these may be mentioned Sarah Parton (Fanny Fern), the Cary sisters, Miss Chubbuck (Fanny Forrester); also Amelia B. Welly, Mrs. Osgood, Anna Cora Mowatt, Elizabeth Oakes Smith and Lydia Maria Child. It may be said that Mrs. Hudson was one of the few female writers who won a position in Washington, and commanded the respect of the biggest dignitaries of the Nation.

The success of these clever women should not be mentioned with a view of leading others to depend on literature. Without going into details, the painful fact is everywhere apparent that both journalism and book-making are too crowded to allow any encouragement. Coming down from literature to other employments, the female population in this city is so disproportionally great that even the struggle for existence becomes intense. A few days ago a crowd of women thronged a public building to a degree that excited general inquiry. It was explained by the fact that an advertisement for a girl in an office appeared that morning and a situation which hardly yielded a man over living was sought for by hundreds, all or whom, with but one exception, were disappointed. It was a sad spectacle, but such is the reality. The poor shop girls, or "white slaves," as they are sometimes called, may be objects of pity, but not more so than the bookbinders, vest hands, cap makers and followers of a score of other employments. Type-writing is a very neat kind of work, but is entirely overdone. Telegraphy probably pays the best of all female employments, but there are a hundred applications for every vacancy. The only kind of employment that is not overdone is housework, and we all know that American girls are above the kitchen. What a pity that this ridiculous notion of taste should be a bar to usefulness!—New York Letter in Utica Herald.

New Things in Watermelons.

"Any new varieties this year?"

"Well, we have the vanilla and the cream flavored watermelons. They are got by injecting the vanilla flavor or a bit of lemon into the stem while the melon is growing. The flavor is taken up by the pulp and makes a delicious combination. Only epicures know of this wrinkle, and we therefore have few of the doctored species on sale. You can get a toothsome dish by plugging a melon, injecting a little lime cured, restoring the plug, and allowing the wine to be taken up by the fruit. But, however the combination is as seductive as Roman punch."

"Any new ways of preparing the melon for the table?"

"Well, I've been eating melons for forty years, and I still prefer them plain. Some of my customers, however, like 'em mixed. One of my best boarding-house customers has watermelon salad every Sunday in the season. She prepares it, she says, just as she does lettuce—cuts the red part of the melon into bits and adds pepper, salt, vinegar, and oil. It ought to make 'em sick, but she says her mixtures just fight for it. Another family that I know of pour molasses on their melons. A good many people, I believe, always add a squeeze of lemon to the fruit. A Boston family that deal with me are always particular to have their melons ripe, and just when they get 'em to suit. They nave the melons cut into little strips, and eat 'em with iced boiled beans. But, as I said before, for my part I like 'em plain."—Philadelphia Times.

AMERICAN COATS-OF-ARMS.

Labor Recognized in the Heraldry of the New World.

An interesting subject—one that has not yet received the attention to which it is entitled—is that of the recognition of industry in what might be called American heraldry. The coats-of-arms and official emblems of old-world nations, as might be expected, are monopolized by ideas of pride and warlike power. With popular rights and peaceful industries the founders of European dynasties and kingdoms had no sympathy. No less was it to be expected, on the other hand, that self-governing communities of frugal and industrious folk, as in a land where everything was to be won by arduous effort, should embrace every opportunity to laud the labor which was the cornerstone of the fabric of their prosperity—of their very existence.

A glance through such a work as Prof. Hodge's "American Constitutions," or Admiral Preble's "History of the Flag of the United States of America," will not fail to reveal an almost universal recognition of industry and commerce. The most notable omission is in the case of the seal and arms. In not one of the designs suggested by or to the committee appointed July 4, 1776, to prepare a device for the great seal of the United States—a committee whose members were Franklin, Adams, and Jefferson—was there any recognition of the peaceful arts. Adams' design was the "Choice of Hercules"—what a pity that upon our passports and commissions we do not behold delineated "the hero resting on a club; Virtue pointing to her rugged mountain on one hand and persuading him to ascend; and Sloth glancing at her flowery paths of pleasure, wantonly reclining on the ground, displaying the charms both of her opulence and person, to seduce him into vice!" Franklin was for a design representing the wheeling of Pharaoh in Jefferson for the "Children of Israel in the Wilderness, plus Hengist and Horsa." Among the supporters in the various designs afterward reported are to be found American Indians, Roman soldiers, "maidens with loose autumn tresses," "knights in arms, with bloody lances," but nowhere a husbandman or artisan, and on the great seal finally adopted June 20, 1782, nothing signifies labor, unless it be the unfinished pyramid which scoffers have insisted upon regarding as prophetic of the Washington monument.

Very different, however, is it with the arms of the different states; there the omission to recognize trade or industry is the comparatively rare exception.

Maine has as her supporters a huntsman leaning on his scythe and a sailor resting on an anchor.

New Hampshire shows a ship on the stocks with American banners displayed, and a group of busy shipwrights.

Vermont places beneath her towering pine-tree three erect sheaves and a red cow—a motley beast than any of the Horse, griffins, boars, and bears that ramp and roar through the forests of European heraldry.

Massachusetts has a decidedly warlike coat-of-arms, with her bolted and moccasined Indian, and her "dexter arm clothed and grasping a broadsword," and Rhode Island's "sinister" has no reference to maritime interests. Nor do Connecticut's three vines, supported and fruited, relate to viticulture, but, instead, to the three original plantations of Hartford, Windsor, and Weatherfield.

New York's arms have no recognition of labor or trade, if we except the two vessels approaching each other on the Hudson.

New Jersey, however, displays three plows in an escutcheon, makes Ceres one of the supporters, and takes as crest a horse's head.

Pennsylvania's supporting horses are of the rampant "wild war-horse" breed, but her shield is charged with peaceful emblems—a plow; on a sea unsy proper, a ship under full sail; and a sheaf of maize. This coat-of-arms was taken chiefly from the old seal of the city of Philadelphia, adopted in 1701, which had in three of its quarters a balance, a wheat sheaf, and a ship sailing upon an ocean.

Delaware shows in one division of her azure shield a cow, and in the other a sheaf of wheat and a bundle of bulrushes. The crest is a ship under full sail, and the supporters are a mariner and a hunter.

Maryland, in adopting the arms of Lord Baltimore, was so fortunate as to obtain as supporters a fisherman and plowman.

Virginia, on the reverse of her great seal, which is nothing if not classical, shows Ceres with her cornucopiæ in one hand and an ear of wheat in the other.

West Virginia has an encyclopædic coat-of-arms. On the dexter side of her ivy-twined rock is a farmer, clothed in the traditional hunting shirt of the mountain region, his right arm resting on the plow-handles, and his left supporting a woodman's ax, with at his feet, a sheaf of wheat and a corn-stalk. On the sinister is a miner with a shovel at his feet, while an anvil, on which rests a sledge-hammer, is partly seen.

North Carolina has on her shield a Ceres with the cornucopia in one hand and in the other three wheat ears.

Georgia has always celebrated trade and industry with elaborate enthusiasm. When George II. chartered the colony, in 1732, one face of the seal represented a provident and laborious colony of silk-worms, sericulture being the special object of the new settlement. When it became a crown colony, in 1754, its seal showed on one side the genius of the colony presenting a skein of silk to the king. The convention of 1777 adopted a seal whereon was shown "an elegant house and other buildings, with sheep and cattle, a river running through the same with a ship under full sail"—a description leaving not a little doubt as to whether the river ran through the elegant house, or the sheep. The present seal, adopted in 1798, bears the following emblematic devices: "A view of the seashore, with a ship bearing the flag of the United States riding at anchor near a wharf, receiving on board hogsheads of tobacco and bales of cotton, emblematic of the exports of the state; at a small distance, a boat landing from the interior of the state with hogsheads, etc., on board, representing her internal traffic; in the inner part, a man plowing, and at a small distance a flock of sheep in different postures, sealed by a flourishing tree; the motto, 'Agriculture and Commerce.'" Not a bad coat-of-arms for the thriving southern commonwealth.

Florida places a side-wheeled steamboat on the river in the middle ground of her coat-of-arms.

Arkansas crowds the shield upon the bosom of her eagle with a steamboat, a beehive and plow, and a sheaf of wheat.

Tennessee places in one division of her coat-of-arms a plow, a wheat-sheaf, and a stalk of cotton, with the word, "Agriculture." The lower half occupied by a loaded barge, with the word, "Commerce."

Ohio, which was without any legalized seal for more than half a century, places the familiar wheat-sheaf on her shield, and has as supporters a farmer with sheaves of wheat and implements of agriculture, in the distance a locomotive and train of cars and a smith with anvil and hammer, and also water and a steamboat.

Indiana's buffalo is being scared over the prairies by the resounding ax of a lusty wood-chopper.

Iowa has on her arms a sheaf and field of standing wheat, with a sickle and other farming implements, a lead furnace and a pile of pig lead, a plow just left by a citizen soldier, and, in the rear of all, a steamboat upon the Mississippi.

Wisconsin has upon her shield an anchor and a mechanic's arm, grasping a hammer, a plow, a spade and pick-ax crossed, and two stalks of Indian corn. The supporters are a sailor and a shirt-sleeved laborer, with a pick-ax.

Minnesota shows a farmer, plowing, his gun resting on a stump, while an Indian recedes before him toward "this bright home in the setting sun."

California blazons upon her shield a hardy miner, with his pick, seeking for gold, and two clipper ships upon the bay.

Oregon has at the base of her shield sheaves of wheat, a plow, a rake, and a pick. In the upper half is a landscape with an emigrant wagon, and in the background a sea bearing a steamship and a brig flying American colors.

Kansas displays a river and a steamboat, a settler's cabin and a man plowing, and a train of ox-wagons moving westward.

Nevada has a benefiting coat-of-arms. It shows a quartz-mill, a tunnel from which a miner is pushing a car of ore; a plow, a sheaf, and a sickle; a train of railroad cars passing a mountain gorge, and a telegraph line.

Nebraska shows a blacksmith at work at his anvil, a sheaf of wheat on his right hand and a tree on his left; in the middle-ground are a wheat field, a log cabin, and a river bearing a steamboat, with, on the further bank, a locomotive and train of cars.

Colorado bears on the lower half of her shield a miner's pick and mallet crossed.

Of the territories, Utah has a beehive on a stand surrounded by flowers, with bees hovering near it. Washington's "female figure with flowing tresses" has an anchor by her side; to her right a city with spires and domes and a steam vessel; on her left a log cabin and a pine forest. On Dakota's shield an anvil and agricultural implements appear in decidedly incongruous juxtaposition with an Indian spearing a buffalo. Arizona is represented by a miner, dressed in shirt and trousers and a broad-leaved hat, resting on pick and spade. Montana shows plow, pick, and spade in the foreground of her shield. Wyoming displays in one compartment of her escutcheon a railroad and a train of cars; in another are agricultural implements.

Thus are labor and commerce represented in American heraldry.—New York Mail and Express.

The New York Mail and Express says that the Brooklyn bridge now earns about $1,300 a day, but it costs nearly $3,000 a day to pay interest on its bonds and the expenses of operation. However, five years hence, when the rapid transit system of Brooklyn is thoroughly established, the bridge may pay its own way.

EASTERN.

The burning of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Orphan Asylum, the first reports of which were confined to a few lines, has developed into a first-class horror. There were between 200 and 300 children in the ill-fated structure, and it was at first believed or at least the public was made to believe that all of them had been rescued. A few hours afterward a gang of laborers were set to work clearing away the debris. These workmen soon came upon the charred remains of half a dozen children. Similar finds were made at intervals, until finally the burned trunks of twenty-two unfortunate little ones had been brought to light. Several orphans are missing, and it is not unlikely that the loss of life will reach thirty or forty. It would appear that the institution was little better than a firetrap, and that, although there was a large fire-plug in the yard, there was not a tool or hose upon the premises. Few come nearer but known to the services, the Sisters in charge have maintained a puzzling reticence in regard to the extent of the disaster or to the possible number of the lost. Much praise is given to the heroic but unfortunate Sister Mary Josephine, who, at the cost of her own life, saved, by her coolness, the bulk of the scholars in the building.

FAREWELL TO AN OLD FRIEND.

BY SARAH B. BISBE.

Good-by, old hat, dear old silk hat,
You're old aside to-day;
But ever I put you on the shelf
I have a word to say.
In weeks and months that now are past,
I 'gan my heart to bind,
I carried you with lowcast step—
Good-by, old hat, good-by.

Good-by, old hat, poor aged thing,
Now marked with stain and spot;
You've covered many noble and sons
And—newer I mental shame—
But you will keep no more guests safe,
So come with me to-day
Alone upon the couch—old
Good-by, old hat, good-by.

Good-by, old hat, some sacred scenes
Have you and I put through;
We've seen some dismal times, have we,
And pleasant moments, too;
And when based deeply with grief and pain,
Wiped with a of manhood true,
I'd like a nail with you, old hat
Good by, old friend, good-by.

Good-by; no doubt this retrospect
Upon a thing worn life
Of many may seem most absurd,
And not worth a single write.
But when I think of by-gone days,
'Tis sad without a sigh
I had parted in you, old hat
Good-by, dear friend, good-by.

SAVED AS BY FATE.

BY SARAH B. BISBE.

"What can it be, Louise, that is so charming about Alice? Any one but her would be pronounced homely, with those features; besides, she is a 'strawberry blonde,' she is freckled, and she has the most immense feet—wears a six, at the very least."

"I am sure I cannot say, but fascinating she certainly is; it must be in her manner or in her accomplishments. Who would ever have thought when she came here six months ago that she would now be the belle of Lancaster?"

"I didn't, I'm sure, or I never would have allowed papa to offer her a home with us; just listen to that voice!"

And Jeannette Taylor paused as the sweet tones of her cousin's voice came floating up to them from the music-room.

"She is practicing up for the concert. I'd give the world to keep her away from there. Claude Moltrop is sure to fall desper ate love with her then ever, for she does look stunning in her concert dress, in spite of her red hair."

"Do you think that would make any difference, Jeanne? Wouldn't he follow her just the same if she did not attend the concert?"

"Hardly, for, you see, Claude knows nothing of this sudden stunning Alice has received from Uncle George, and if he should not meet her to-night, I feel sure I could secure him before Alice would ever see him again, for you know she goes on the early train.

"I rather think so myself," mused Louise Lorton, Jeanne Taylor's married sister. "He seems to be almost as attentive to you as he is to Alice; it may be only her singing which attracts him. What are you going to wear to-night, Jeanne?"

"My white theme, but I know it's as vain to think anything about me as she sings at that concert. I wish I dare send her away this minute," and Jeanne Taylor looked at her sister with despair and anger in her black eyes.

"It was a mistake, father's bringing her here," said Mrs. Lorton. "Between you and me nothing rash, Jeanne; perhaps I may find a way to prevent her attending the concert."

"Oh, Louise, how? I have positively begged her not to go, have even hinted that it was unladylike to sing in public, but she says he begged from her cousin a single iota.

Mrs. Lorton smiled, and, bending over, whispered in her sister's ear a few words which acted like magic upon the despairing look in Jeannes face.

"Do, Louise, if you only could!" she said.

"I think I can," replied Mrs. Lorton. "And now go down stairs and offer to help Alice with her packing, and then when you are both dressed come to me in the dining-room, and I will have everything in readiness prepared for you."

Jeanne departed with a little triumphant laugh, and Mrs. Lorton made up her mind to a full-sustained book.

Miss Taylor was an orphan. Her parents had left her a small fortune, which her uncle, George, had offered her after a home with his own daughters as chaperon; but because she could not accept of the latter she could not refuse the home proffered her on account of her father's request, and so it was that Alice Taylor came to Lancaster.

Mr. Moltrop said but little more to the ladies, and left them to make his way back through the hall, which was crowded, to the green-room.

"Marie," said he, "Alice Taylor is not going to concert. What will you do?"

"Not going to concert?" questioned Mrs. Moltrop, in excited surprise. "She must and shall sing, and I not have any concert at all without her. What is the matter? Is she ill?"

"Not that I know of," Mrs. Lorton, or rather Jeanne Taylor, gave me to understand she was not ill at some thing."

"Therefore," said the Miss of the Moltrops, "I shall go to the carriage and we will go after her. I would not disappoint this great audience for anything. If Alice Taylor is in town she must sing."

They had driven but a block or two when the rain fell began to ring excitedly, and the street sellers rushed toward the indicated locality.

"Oh, how delightful!" exclaimed Jeanne, clapping her hands, "and Mrs. Moltrop, Claude, as he harkened to to the bells.

"That's true," said Mrs. Moltrop. "What if I should have caught fire? It was fearfully warm."

"Let's go back," said Claude.

Their forebodings were too true. When they arrived a frantic mass of people were pouring from the building, and the engines were playing a steady stream of water upon the roaring flames.

It was not long before the fire was subdued, but the scene was a heart-rending one when the mass of burned and crushed humanity was taken from the crowded building. Many lives had been lost in the swaying living mass who had wildly attempted to escape, and many had been more or less burned by the hungry flames.

Claude Moltrop assisted Edgar Lorton, as he brought out his dead wife, all crushed and bleeding, and Jeanne Taylor was found with her beautiful face and hands deeply burned by the falling embers. It was the saddest occurrence which had ever happened in the little town, and the survivors never forgot that scene to their dying day.

Poor Jeanne Taylor was scarred deeply for life, and when at last her cousin and Claude Moltrop were engaged, for Jeanne would not let Alice leave, she told them the whole story of the evening of the concert.

Alice freely forgave her, as she looked at her scarred face, and thought that she herself had been saved as by fate.

The Kind of Oil.

For a moment let us glance at the principal sources of animal and vegetable oil supply, ere the fountains of mineral oil were revealed for the use and comfort of the human family.

First and foremost, of course, ranked the lamb for its delicate and known brain to drain oil which drained from the blubber of the great Greenland whale—a large whale sometimes yielding fully thirty tons of blubber—each ton representing nearly 200 gallons of oil. Though the cachalot, or sperm whale, could never rival the Greenland whale in the quantity of its contribution, it had at least the advantage of quality and variety, since, besides ordinary blubber, it yields a large amount of sperm-oil, and also of spermaceti. Of the latter valuable product, the head alone often yields ten barrels.

Next among oil-yielding fish come the sharks, the seal, the cod, the herring, and others.

Of animal fats are butter, tallow, lard, goose-grease, neat's-foot oil (prepared from the feet of oxen and used in currying in dressing leather), and mare's grease imported from Buenos Ayres and Montevideo, where a multitude of these animals are annually slaughtered for the sake of their hides, tallow, and bones! In Russia, especially at Moscow, yellow soap is in great request for making soap and pomatum.

Vegetable oils form a very important item in our supplies inasmuch as our seeds to the value of £5,500,000 are annually imported into Britain for crushing purposes, and our exports of oil are roughly valued at £1,250,000. The export of seed-oil from London, Hull, and Liverpool, in 1869, was 11,000,000 gallons.

Under the head of seed-oils rank linseed, cotton-seed, and castor oil. Colza oil, also, is made under the name of rape, ravison, navette, and other names.

Almut this time she received a letter from another uncle of hers, who wished her to fill a subordinate place to him. She hailed the change with joy, and had planned to start for his distant home the morning after the concert.

All this had been kept perfectly quiet by her cousins, for they feared she would receive an offer of marriage from Claude Moltrop before her departure. Alice knew all this, but she expected to meet Claude once more before leaving, and her gentle heart fluttered at what might happen on that portentous evening.

She was, therefore, a little surprised at Jeanne's kindness that afternoon when she came down and offered so pleasantly to help her about her packing.

"I am sorry you are to leave us, Alice," she said; "although I don't doubt you will like it at Uncle George's."

"I hope so," said Alice, brightly; "and I never shall forget your kindness in giving me a home when I had none, Jeanne."

"That was nothing," said Jeanne. "How time does fly; we ought to be dressing now, and Louise has set out lunch for us before we drive up."

Alice did not know what to make of this unusual kindness, and went away to her dressing room thinking that she had possibly misjudged her cousins after all, and they were sorry she was leaving them.

Dress made a great change in the plain little girl's looks, and it was an airy, graceful figure that accompanied Jeanne to the dining room where Louise, also attired for the concert, was awaiting them.

"We will have to go alone girls. Papa and Mr. Lorton will drop in before the concert is over," she said, and then she observed, "I have some splendid lemonade here, as cold as ice can make it. I thought you would like some, it is such a warm evening."

"Thank you," said Alice, "I do not care for anything to eat, but will take a glass of lemonade."

"I knew your taste, you see, my dear cozy," said Louise lightly, handing each of the girls a heavy goblet which stood ready filled at her elbow.

"How do you like it?" she asked, when Alice had half emptied her glass.

"It is excellent," was her smiling reply.

"We must get on our wraps," said Jeanne, hurriedly, setting down her glass. "It is getting late; drink up your lemonade, Al. I hear the carriage."

Alice drained the last drop of the delicious draught and followed her cousin into the sitting room where her wraps were lying.

"Sit down in this chair, Al, and let me arrange those lilies of the valley in your hair," said Louise. "That would not have been our carriage, Jeanne."

Alice sat down, and that was the last she remembered distinctly, for she fell into a deep door, and soon after the two sisters laid her limp form upon the floor and left her there to—die.

"You are sure it will not hurt her, Louise?" asked Jeanne, a little regretfully.

"Of course not," was the reply. "I've taken it for neuralgia a great many times; she will have a dreamless night's sleep—that is all."

"And then?"

"Then she will start for Uncle George's in the morning train, and you, if you play your cards right, will marry Claude Moltrop."

Jeanne drew a shawl carelessly over her white-robed cousin, overlooked her toilet, and then followed her sister to the carriage and was driven to the large hall where the concert was to be given.

The two ladies rustled to their seats, and it was not long before Claude Moltrop joined them.

"Did not Miss Alice come with you?" were almost the first words he said.

"She—she—" faltered Mrs. Lorton.

"She starts for the East in the early train, and so gave up attending."

"Then I will go, too, without her," said Mr. Moltrop, and he did.

Jeanne Taylor was an orphan. LIFE IN A MONASTERY.

A Monotonous Existence—The Daily Routine.

A monk's day begins at 4:30 a. m., and as breakfast is a very light and hasty matter, taken without formality somewhere between 8 and 9, no one will be surprised to hear that English stomachs are ready for their principal meal at 12:30. Let us go through a day: At 4:55 precisely—for punctuality is a great matter—the big bell begins tolling for matinus. This is the modern equivalent of what used to be called the midnight office. In the thirteenth century the time was 2 a. m., now it is 5: in some monasteries on the continent it is 4. But in those days they went to bed at sundown or soon after 6, while we moderns think 9 o'clock early. When the tower clock has ceased striking 5 all rise at a signal given by the superior, from the places where they have been kneeling and waiting in the chancel and the matin service begins. On ordinary days it lasts an hour and a quarter, and has not much about it of ceremony or ritual that could catch the eye of an onlooker. But on festivals it is an almost gay scene, and must begin earlier on account of its great protraction. On such occasions a large number are attracted to come and help the family choir to drain out which drained from the blubber of the great Greenland whale—a large whale sometimes yielding fully thirty tons of blubber—each ton representing nearly 200 gallons of oil. Though the cachalot, or sperm whale, could never rival the Greenland whale in the quantity of its contribution, it had at least the advantage of quality and variety, since, besides ordinary blubber, it yields a large amount of sperm-oil, and also of spermaceti. Next among oil-yielding fish come the sharks, the seal, the cod, the herring, and others.

Of animal fats are butter, tallow, lard, goose-grease, neat's-foot oil (prepared from the feet of oxen and used in currying in dressing leather), and mare's grease imported from Buenos Ayres and Montevideo, where a multitude of these animals are annually slaughtered for the sake of their hides, tallow, and bones! In Russia, especially at Moscow, yellow soap is in great request for making soap and pomatum.

Vegetable oils form a very important item in our supplies inasmuch as our seeds to the value of £5,500,000 are annually imported into Britain for crushing purposes, and our exports of oil are roughly valued at £1,250,000. The export of seed-oil from London, Hull, and Liverpool, in 1869, was 11,000,000 gallons.

Under the head of seed-oils rank linseed, cotton-seed, and castor oil. Colza oil, also, is made under the name of rape, ravison, navette, and other names.

Almut this time she received a letter from another uncle of hers, who wished her to fill a subordinate place to him. She hailed the change with joy, and had planned to start for his distant home the morning after the concert.

All this had been kept perfectly quiet by her cousins, for they feared she would receive an offer of marriage from Claude Moltrop before her departure. Alice knew all this, but she expected to meet Claude once more before leaving, and her gentle heart fluttered at what might happen on that portentous evening.

She was, therefore, a little surprised at Jeanne's kindness that afternoon when she came down and offered so pleasantly to help her about her packing.

"I am sorry you are to leave us, Alice," she said; "although I don't doubt you will like it at Uncle George's."

"I hope so," said Alice, brightly; "and I never shall forget your kindness in giving me a home when I had none, Jeanne."

"That was nothing," said Jeanne. "How time does fly; we ought to be dressing now, and Louise has set out lunch for us before we drive up."

Alice did not know what to make of this unusual kindness, and went away to her dressing room thinking that she had possibly misjudged her cousins after all, and they were sorry she was leaving them.

Dress made a great change in the plain little girl's looks, and it was an airy, graceful figure that accompanied Jeanne to the dining room where Louise, also attired for the concert, was awaiting them.

"We will have to go alone girls. Papa and Mr. Lorton will drop in before the concert is over," she said, and then she observed, "I have some splendid lemonade here, as cold as ice can make it. I thought you would like some, it is such a warm evening."

"Thank you," said Alice, "I do not care for anything to eat, but will take a glass of lemonade."

"I knew your taste, you see, my dear cozy," said Louise lightly, handing each of the girls a heavy goblet which stood ready filled at her elbow.

"How do you like it?" she asked, when Alice had half emptied her glass.

"It is excellent," was her smiling reply.

"We must get on our wraps," said Jeanne, hurriedly, setting down her glass. "It is getting late; drink up your lemonade, Al. I hear the carriage."

Alice drained the last drop of the delicious draught and followed her cousin into the sitting room where her wraps were lying.

"Sit down in this chair, Al, and let me arrange those lilies of the valley in your hair," said Louise. "That would not have been our carriage, Jeanne."

Alice sat down, and that was the last she remembered distinctly, for she fell into a deep door, and soon after the two sisters laid her limp form upon the floor and left her there to—die.

"You are sure it will not hurt her, Louise?" asked Jeanne, a little regretfully.

"Of course not," was the reply. "I've taken it for neuralgia a great many times; she will have a dreamless night's sleep—that is all."

"And then?"

"Then she will start for Uncle George's in the morning train, and you, if you play your cards right, will marry Claude Moltrop."

Jeanne drew a shawl carelessly over her white-robed cousin, overlooked her toilet, and then followed her sister to the carriage and was driven to the large hall where the concert was to be given.

The two ladies rustled to their seats, and it was not long before Claude Moltrop joined them.

"Did not Miss Alice come with you?" were almost the first words he said.

"She—she—" faltered Mrs. Lorton.

"She starts for the East in the early train, and so gave up attending."

"Then I will go, too, without her," said Mr. Moltrop, and he did.

Jeanne Taylor was an orphan. Her parents had left her a small fortune, which her uncle, George, had offered her after a home with his own daughters as chaperon; but because she could not accept of the latter she could not refuse the home proffered her on account of her father's request, and so it was that Alice Taylor came to Lancaster.

Mr. Moltrop said but little more to the ladies, and left them to make his way back through the hall, which was crowded, to the green-room.

"Marie," said he, "Alice Taylor is not going to concert. What will you do?"

"Not going to concert?" questioned Mrs. Moltrop, in excited surprise. "She must and shall sing, and I not have any concert at all without her. What is the matter? Is she ill?"

"Not that I know of," Mrs. Lorton, or rather Jeanne Taylor, gave me to understand she was not ill at some thing."

"Therefore," said the Miss of the Moltrops, "I shall go to the carriage and we will go after her. I would not disappoint this great audience for anything. If Alice Taylor is in town she must sing."

They had driven but a block or two when the fire-bell began to ring excitedly, and the street sellers rushed toward the indicated locality.

"Oh, how delightful!" exclaimed Jeanne, clapping her hands, "and Mrs. Moltrop, Claude, as he harkened to to the bells.

"That's true," said Mrs. Moltrop. "What if I should have caught fire? It was fearfully warm."

"Let's go back," said Claude.

Their forebodings were too true. When they arrived a frantic mass of people were pouring from the building, and the engines were playing a steady stream of water upon the roaring flames.

It was not long before the fire was subdued, but the scene was a heart-rending one when the mass of burned

THE ACORN AND THE POD.

A celebrated gentleman, one summer day
Had an acorn and a pea in his way.
He picked up the acorn and said, "I declare
If all one wears a tree, the other a pea,
How wisely and well the Lord would provide
And the trees would be big, as we see the pea is!"
So he put the acorn in his pocket with glee,
And planted the pea 'neath the wide spreading tree.

LINES TO MY SPRING OVERCOAT.

Oh, I could sing thee with a tongue of fire
Or touch my lyre with a master hand,
For thou art only fit to take to bed,
Thou dear old spring overcoat!

Early last spring.

Why, how-dee-do?

Thou one wast warm enough for or dress
Or for a dress coat, and now art fit for less
In August heat, when sunstroke flies around
And torpid dogs in dusty streets are found
Thou smothered to me.

Of cold November makes me wish the sun
Beat down in shining cities' sunk
Warm

And carry me who sees the heads and hearts
Of all freezing to death.

The awakening was spontaneous, and found the patient in perfect health. She did not know she had been unconscious for nearly eight weeks.

CLEVELAND'S CABINET.

Possible Effects of the Change on Office-Holders—Views of an Old-Timer.

[Correspondence Rochester Sunday Herald.]

"In the principal topic of conversation at present is the probable action of the new administration.

"A speaker was Mr. William M. Ashley, of Niles avenue, a man whose large and wide acquaintance with prominent people here in Washington renders his views of unusual weight.

"All important question among the people of the various departments is, 'Who in my opinion there will be very few changes among the old-time employees who have been here year in and year out through administrations. The removals will be among the heads or departments.'

"The sense of interest which must forever pervade the departments is, I suppose, essential to the proper transaction of business.

"Oh, rather, I reckon. It omits the cloaks and cobwebs. Some got very blue, for they purchased little homes which they must sell.

"In summer it was reported that many died of malaria. How is it?"

"Only ill of a fear of chance. I think Washington is on very malarious. At the same time I admit that since residing here I have not always felt first-rate. At times I have been greatly troubled with palpitating pulse, that day my right arm and leg would torture me with pain, then I'd be great restless, heat and sweating by night, and perhaps the next day the arm and leg would be similarly affected. Then again it would become in some parts of my body and produce a tenderness to the touch, and on every all-reason and no conceivably free from internal disease in the case of the recently-hour hours."

"Of course you consulted the doctors regarding your difficulty?"

"I consulted them! Well, I should say I did, and so I had neuralgic others but I had inflammatory rheumatism, for which I was cupped."

"How did they try to relieve your misery?"

"Do they counted and plucked me, blistered and plastered and oiled me. I had a friend living in Michigan who had been afflicted in a similar way and had died. He wrote me regarding his recovery. I signed me to try the remedy which he took. I procured a bottle and commenced to use, taking a tablespoonful after meal and at bed time. I had used it but a week when I noticed a decrease or soreness of the joints and a general feeling of relief. I persevered in its use and in a few weeks could move around without any pain. I told my friends that it was the best medicine I had ever used and that I would use it as long as I lived."

"Do you regard your cure as permanent?"

"It was more than a year ago, the pain has not returned, and I have can't been in the joints as I am now."

"Speaking of President-elect Cleveland, what is your opinion, will compose his cabinet?"

"That is difficult to determine as it is to what office-holders will go. Many good men have been named for the positions of Postmaster-General, Methodist, not to mention a lot of loose lights. Every prominent Democrat in the country is looking to win; but, then, as is always the case, only a few can win."

"Do you expect to be numbered among the office-holders?"

"No, my friend," remarked a leading Democrat, Methodist, not to be considered individual who is invited to take a drink, "I drink nothing but water. 'Water is the best drink for man,' you know. 'Very true,' replied the wine-cup; '

Just One Way to Do.

Joseph Howard, Jr., a newspaper correspondent of National reputation, writes to the Boston Herald concerning good men who have been ruined through drink. Mr. Howard is known to his friends as a conveyal man, fond of a glass of liquor, yet he says:

"There is just one way to do, and that is, to literally and absolutely avoid tasting spirits at all. I am no believer in moderate drinking, but, while I would be the last to suggest any arbitrary dealing with my fellowmen, I believe the best thing that could possibly be given to the generation following fast upon our heels would be a conscience so alert that the faintest leaning toward indulgence in this most pernicious of habits, would seem like flying in the face of Providence and a desecration of the noblest sentiment known to man. I was in the great bar room of a magnificent hotel last night, talking with a number of friends, all of whom were indulging from time to time in summer drinks. Tw clergs, one I should judge fifteen and the other seventeen, attired in the tulled fashion, entered, smoking, and without the faintest suspicion that they were doing anything to attract attention, much less to excite a smile, leaned upon the bar. 'What will you take, Charley?' said one. 'Oh I don't know, I think a whiskey smash is good enough for me. What will you have?' 'Well that suits me.' The bar tender mixed two whisky smashes the boys raised the glasses and drained the cups, paid the check and walked out. That incident was a leaf upon which nearly every man in the room, and there were from twenty to thirty of them, delivered a little sermon, the burden, of all of which was: 'How absurd, how ridiculous; what a pity, what a shame; and yet those boys saw their father, his friends, and a score of well dressed, well behaved gentlemen doing precisely the same thing so why shouldn't they do it."

She Rode the Pony.

Deacon Badkin's daughters, Samantha and Martha, have for a long time watched with longing eyes the young ladies who frequently pass and repass, seated in the beautiful and fashionable deggarts.

"They are just too lovely for anything," said Samantha. "We must tease pa to let us get a pony and a cart."

"Indeed we must," assented Martha.

"What on airth do you gals want of one or them stuck-up sarter things?" inquired the Deacon. The pesky thing'll run away with ye, likely's not."

"Oh, no, pa, we can drive him. Now, please do say yes," cried both maidens in unison, till importunity won.

"Well, well," said the Deacon, "ef you two gals will jest stop raising long enough for me to take a nap I'll think about it."

A few days thereafter a beautiful little white pony made its appearance in the stable.

"Now, gals," said the Deacon, "I've got the hoss, but you'll have to wait a day or two for the cart. Don't go to bein' onerust now. He'll keep, I'll warrant ye."

The Deacon had scarcely left the house before the two young women led the pony out into the back yard and were admiring his beauty.

"I do really believe I could ride him," said Samantha. "I mean to try it, anyway."

"You haven't any saddle, or habit, either. Suppose somebody should see you," warned Martha.

"Why, there is no one but you!" asked Samantha, as she led the pony up to the doorstep, and, grasping the mane, mounted "man-fashion."

The pony sprang forward and dashed around the yard, as in a ring, at the top of its speed. Samantha screamed as I released her arms about the neck of the animal, and used all her powers of persuasion to induce him to cease his performances. But all to no purpose. Round and round he went, till audience he turned with a whirl and plunged toward Isegate. Shrieks of horror burst from the two gals as the gate swung and the pony, with Samantha, now in a state of marvelous ubiquitude, clinging to his neck, rushed out and bore down the street at the top of his speed. Shriek after shriek rent the air and the cession, who was quietly wending his way to his office, glancing about, saw the flying steed and its rider.

"Mercer's take," said he. "I'd orter told the gals I ought that pony from the circus man."

When Samantha and the pony burst into the circus tent as I made a circuit of the ring the effect was certainly thrilling and full worth the price of admission.—Boston Globe.

Gathered From Garbage.

A machine has been put to use in New York to sift from house refuse and street-sweepings all rags, old iron, broken glass, etc. The machine is described as being a vast rag and bone-picker of many Italian power, working by steam. Its daily capacity is 150 loads of 1,000 pounds each. The oscillator moves to and fro 250 times a minute, while two or three Italians stand alongside and pick all rags and scraps of paper out of the mass. What is then left, after the dust has fallen below, is passed into a washer, in which all straw, leather, vegetable refuse and other light material rises to the surface of the water, and is burned. The coal, iron, glass, and other heavy objects fall to the bottom of the water, are washed in another vat of water and are sold. Out of 150 loads of refuse but thirty are conveyed away as waste. The rags bring about $30 per ton, the old iron forty cents a hundred pounds, the glass thirty cents a hundred; the bones are the most valuable, and about 400 pounds of coal and cinder are obtained from a load of 1,800 pounds.—Paper World.

A SUBMARINE HOTEL.

A Seaside Boarder who Lives on Sea-Cucumbers.

Several years ago in walking along the half submerged fringing reef of the Tortugas group of islands, my attention was attracted by numbers of great, black, worm-like creatures that were strewn over the bottom just within the breakers, where the water was smooth. They were Holothurian, or sea-cucumbers. Wishing to secure a large specimen, I hauled my boat over among them, and soon had one more than a foot in length in the glass jar, or portable aquarium, carried for that purpose.

Another was lifted from its sandy bed for examination, and a curious creature it was. It seemed like a great, grotesque caterpillar, made out of leather and stuffed with water, as the handling caused it to eject two streams of water with considerable force. After placing it upon the seat of the boat, we found that the creature had ejected all its internal organs—actually thrown them off. This would have been a grievous calamity to almost any animal except the sea-cucumber; but, curiously enough, they have the faculty of producing lost parts to a wonderful degree, and if placed back in the water would soon provide themselves with an entirely new set.

If we should follow up our investigations of the anatomy of the sea-cucumber we should find that it breathes by what is called a water-vascular system. In the star-fish a hard rod spot is seen upon the upper surface, punctured with minute holes. Through this water is strained and taken in, passing out into the arms and filling the sac-like feet. In the sea-cucumber there is a similar arrangement, only the madreporic plate, as the pink sieve is called, is on the inside.

Though certainly not gourmands, starvation affects them in a remarkable way. Thus, if kept a long time without food, a ring will be formed about the tail that grows deeper and deeper, until finally the piece drops off. In a short time another ring appears and another piece is sacrificed—a most remarkable operation, you will say, but quite ingenious when we understand it.

The animal is merely retrenching, and, as the food supply becomes smaller and smaller, portions of the body are thrown off, so that there will not be so much to feed, until, at last, the sea-cucumber will sacrifice its entire body to save the mouth or head, and finally this dies, certainly after a heroic struggle.

But, while we have been looking at other sea-cucumbers, what has happened to the one we placed in the glass jar? Being a large animal, it soon exhausted the air in the water, and is now endeavoring to get out, twisting its body deliberately about to show its discomfort, for you must remember that the sea-cucumber and all other water animals require air just as much as ourselves.

For a few moments the sea-cucumber writhed about in its lazy fashion, when, all at once, out of one end I saw peeping a curious, delicate head.

A moment later it was still further out—a transparent, shining fish, and soon, with a convulsive wiggle, it freed itself from its strange prison and swam about a moment; then it settled to the bottom.

Its body was so delicate and transparent that prior could almost be read through it, and a specimen that I have before me now, though shrunk and hardened in alcohol for several years, is still almost like glass.

How did the fish get into the sea-cucumber? you will ask. This was, at first, a puzzle, and to ascertain whether it was accidental or not, we collected a large number of the cucumbers, (Holothuria floridana), and in nearly every case, as soon as the animal had exhausted the air in our aquarium, the silvery, eel-like Fierasfer—for this is the fish's name—would come wiggling out, swim about a moment, as if dazed and bewildered, and then sink to the bottom and die.

It was evident that the fish was not eaten by the Holothurian, and equally plain that the fish was not adapted for the outside world. Hence, we assumed that the Fierasfer was a boarder in the cucumber, and such is really the case.

But, though I made many experiments, the fish could never be induced to return to its home, though freshly aerated water was constantly supplied.

The explanation that seemed the most tenable was that the fish never left the holothurian; but this was highly improbable, and so the puzzle remained until it was solved by the curator of the great aquarium at Naples, Italy.

He found that his sea-cucumbers were also inhabited by a Fierasfer, and finally returned; and here is the most remarkable thing about it. Instead of returning head first, as you would naturally expect, the Fierasfer slipped, not its head, but the tip of its tail into the orifice.

In a moment, the sea-cucumber relaxed to draw in water, and the cunning fish slipped in an inch, then rested; another relaxation by the cucumber, and another inch gained, and so on until, to the amazement of the Italian naturalist, the Fierasfer disappeared, tail first, within the very accommodating animal.

The Fierasfer, then, is a boarder in the sea-cucumber, a tenant that not only lives upon its host without pay, but does not hesitate to attack it when hungry. This has been proved by Prof. Semper, who found pieces of the water-lung of the living hotel in the stomach of the boarder; but, as we have seen, the former has the power of reproducing lost parts, and probably does not suffer. The boarder undoubtedly feels upon the feed taken by its host.—Prof Holden in Golden Days.

Charles Sumner's Widow.

A rumor that the well-known American banker in London, Mr. Junius S. Morgan, is to marry the divorced wife of Charles Sumner has obtained a limited circulation. It has been published in a New Orleans paper as a fact already announced by authority in London. It will very naturally create some surprise, for Mr. Morgan is about 70 years old, and was supposed to have passed the marriage point. His first wife died six or seven years ago. She was a daughter of John Pierpont, the American poet, who died at Medford, Mass., in 1866. He was at the time holding an office in the Treasury Department at Washington, which had been given him in recognition of his services as chaplain in a Massachusetts regiment during the war. Mrs. Morgan was a lady of great culture and was for nearly half a century a worthy companion of her distinguished husband. They had two or three children, the best known of whom is Mr. John Pierpont Morgan, of the New York banking firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co. J. S. Morgan went over to London in 1857 or thereabouts with George Peabody, who that year came over to America and established the Peabody Institute at his old home, Danvers, Mass. Mr. Morgan had already made a fortune. He began life as a clerk in a cotton goods establishment at Hartford, Conn., and after prospering till he became a partner in the house sold out and went to Boston, where he became associated with one of the largest importing concerns there. It was thus that he got his London acquaintance and that he attracted the admiration and friendship of Mr. Peabody. When he went over to London he became associated with Mr. Peabody in the banking business. He was the "Co" of George Peabody & Co., and immediately became a great favorite with the first people of London and American visitors. He is a gentleman of splendid appearance, the most refined tastes and agreeable manner. The banking house of J. S. Morgan & Co. is known all over the world, and through it most Americans transact their London business. Mr. Morgan is worth at least $20,000,000, and has a country house near London that is noted for its Elizabethan architecture and beautiful surroundings. The lady to whom they say he is to be married wears the name of Mrs. Alice Mason. She discarded the Sumner name when she got the divorce from the celebrated Massachusetts statesman. She was a widow when he married her, and her first husband's name was Mason. The latter name she chose to keep. There has always been a mystery about her separation from Sumner. They were married soon after the war, in 1866, I believe, and the next year she got her divorce. They lived together but a few months, when she left him in disgust. Sumner was then an old man and had always lived a bachelor, and he did not long survive his unfortunate matrimonial venture. Mrs. Mason is not yet an old woman, having been quite young and very attractive in personal appearance when she was married to Sumner. She has an ample fortune in her own right.—New York World.

A Sad Disappointment.

At Sacramento, the other day, a man was on his last legs with pneumonia. His life was insured for several thousand dollars, and it appeared to him a little tough that he was to get no fun out of all this money. Determined to do the best he could under the circumstances, he made a will that he thought would cover a portion of the ground. His will provided that at his funeral every hack in town should be employed, and all of his friends and acquaintances invited to attend and take a ride afterward. All who attended were also invited to participate in a grand banquet in the evening at the hotel, at which a brass band, which should lead the funeral procession, was to enliven the occasion with music. After making his will he was so tickled with the idea of the whole affair, he could see it in his mind's eye, and with a thought of what a large slice of the insurance he was then having the fun of spending, that he at once began to mend, and in spite of himself got well. Now he is as far as ever from the insurance money, and mourns the loss of the grand banquet, the brass band and the other big things that were to make his funeral a notable event.—*Terr. In the construction which they place upon Gen. Cleveland's letter to the Civil-Service Reform Association, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times, Democrats and Republicans are about equally divided, and they are pleased or dissatisfied accordingly. The general tenor of the press opinion is commended by a large portion of both parties, but many officeholders and the Democratic spoilsmen are puzzled to measure the length and breadth of Cleveland's meaning in the paragraph which declares that there are many persons holding office who have forfeited all just claim to retention because they have used their places for party purposes, and proved themselves offensive partisans and unscrupulous manipulators of local party management. It is claimed that this paragraph opens a wide door through which he may drive out nineteen-twentieths of the employes of the Government, and that he would not have been so careful to insert it unless it had been his purpose to take advantage of that easy method of displacing Republicans and make room for Democrats. Another class of Democrats approve of the theory of the letter that merit rather than mere party service should be the test of fitness for office, but they question the judgment of Cleveland in committing himself on the subject of civil-service reform in anticipation of his inaugural deliverances upon public questions, and without sufficient reason for discussing the subject at this time.

Hon. Grover Cleveland:

SIR: We have the honor to address behalf of the National Civil Service League, an association expressly of all parties, whose sole purpose is to its name, and which knows no pol party controversy. The vast majority number of persons engaged in the and the great novelties and changes tion ground powerfully in favor of the bill for a gener lowed the change of party of the Administration, which produced so prominent an impression ing of the last election, that with Democ form were taken with the expectation to the success of the Democratic party 16, 1881. ALBANY, Dec. 3

DEAR SIR: Your communication, of behalf of the National Civil Service Reform League, has been re I have read it with much interest, and am pleased to find that the Civil-service Reform League, which has been so long and favorably known to me, is absolutely established upon that basis of the statute referred to by you, to secure such result has been pa Congress with the assent of both parties, and by the hearty fact that a majority of the people of the State, evinced by the vote to which I have referred, has conferred upon me the power to put in effect, promised the people that I would do so. I am not unmindful of the which you refer, that many of our citi that the present party change in the Executive may demonstrate that the which have grown up in the de are unendurable. I know that m pected, and that the spoils-syst been supposed to be intimately related to the party success. I am not unmindful of the fact that many of the appointments made by the present incumbents, in my opinion, were made during the terms for which they were appointed, solely on partisan grounds, for the purpose of getting rid of the incumbents, and in political accord with the ma future good. Mr. Burton and Going he has enjoyed so much of

It is getting dreadful polite," said Tom Steele as he threw the last of some young tenant of the Hall, and I have not been invited to take his place. I shall become feeble-minded if I am not soon given some active duty to perform."

"Why are women so wild always," he cried, giving a savage clutch at a paperweight sitting near, "about handsome men? I could have sworn she cared for me until Fremont came, and now she scarcely deigns a glance in my direction. Heaven knows I wish I could give her up as easily as she has me, but I can't do it, and it costs a desperate effort to wear the indifferent face I do."

As Janet Grey, Mabel was more fascinating than she knew, and Norman McGregor, the commercial suitor, found her constant coldness prompted more by nature, by fact, than by the requirements of art, a latter thing to lean, now that he was called upon every night to suffer from it.

Even the relenting, demanded by the plot of the play in the end, was one in which she put so little animation that he drew no comfort from it, and was only withheld by pride from giving up the character which brought him torture every night.

The afternoon of the last rehearsal came, and all final arrangements were being completed.

Mabel, wearing a gossamer over her bewitching Scotch costume, was putting some finishing touches to the stage decorations, while Mr. Fremont prepared evergreens for her, when this conversation carried on in the gentleman's dressing-room met her interested ears:

"Hallo Tom," exclaimed Hal Burton's familiar voice, as some one entered the room; "glad to see you back; when did you come?"

"Tuesday, at twelve."

"Sorry you staid so long, my boy; we have to send you wocfully in this affair, and I told Beckett last night if I could not get my note before you left—"

"Why, yes, I did; but I must say I don't understand yet the cause of your overwhelming politeness. That little note you inclosed, 'May I come soon dear,' was quite beyond my comprehension.

"What are you driving at, Steele? The note of regret you sent the night before I left—"

"My note of regret! Is the boy mad? I wrote you a note in regard to the house of Browning; told you I had no intention of standing in your way, and hoped you'd be successful in getting her. Is not that the one you received?"

"No such note has ever reached me," Tom answered, decisively, while Hal, illuminated by a swift idea, broke into a fit of laughter.

"I have it now," he said. "I wrote Miss Mabel Benton a note the same morning, and, in my haste, exchanged the envelopes. How very careless! but my overwhelming politeness, that you should misconstrue my meaning, is quite beyond my comprehension."

"What are you driving at, Steele?" the latter repeated, a little nettled.

"Why, Harry," she said, "I must go home now; I will be back in time for the next act."

"Little witch! do you think I'll release you till the prince is made? One little word is all I ask, and, sweetheart, that is 'yes.'"

"Some one is coming. I have no time to be serious," she replied, archly.

"The whole world may come," he answered, with decision; "but you shall not leave me till you say what I desire to hear."

"Ah, Mabel!" he cried, impulsively, "if such is the case, promise to take what I give you, and give what I ask in return—"

"What do you demand?"

"Your heart for mine," was the quick response; "are you willing to make the exchange?"

JANUARY.

The oil, 11th and 12th days of the first month of the year were not a bit too cooled. Weather ever experienced in the Northwest. The frigid zone extended itself over nearly the entire North American continent. The mercury solidified in tubes in some localities. Fuel became very scarce, and prices ruled extremely unbearable, and 25 cents were put forward, and in some instances more for the coal. Railroads were blockaded, and travel was suspended. Snow-drifts were piled up to the height of telegraph poles. Snow-plows were put in motion, and for days and weeks they battled with the drifts. The loss was enormous. Many lives were lost. Suffering and destitution prevailed. Steamships in the Delaware River were frozen in the ice, and were fully 3 weeks in getting to sea. The loss of life and property in the Northwest was appalling. Many persons were frozen to death. Many were badly frozen. Many had their limbs amputated. Many were disabled for life. The loss was enormous. Many persons were frozen to death in the streets of San Francisco. Monster Mercantile Library Building in New York was burned, but contents saved. The latter was insured for $500,000. Loss on the building, in which many tailor people had offices, $1,000,000.

"It is not likely to touch me this terrible curse" Ah, vain boaster, you little know its range and territory. Because you have no trace of its blight in your own family nor in your immediate circle of friends, is no sure sign of immunity. Times change and men change with them. The happy to day becomes often the sad to morrow.

"It has touched me," said a bright and brave young business man the other day, on the railway train. "How is that?" inquired his friend who saw no token on his manly countenance of a blight that so soon makes its mark on the "human face divine." "Well, six months ago, my employer when off his balance, signed some notes that he should not have endorsed, and yesterday the firm (a heavy iron firm) went under. So here I am and nearly two thousand others, in dead of winter thrown out of employment." That man's drunken net has touched the comfort and possibly the subsistence of not less than ten thousand human beings.

Not Paid For.

Three saloon keepers in Chicago were found guilty of selling to minors, and the following is the address of the judge who sentenced them:

By the law, you may sell to men and women if they want it. You have given bond and you are licensed to sell to them; no one has a right to molest you in your legal business, no matter what families are destroyed or rendered miserable; no matter what wives are treated with violence, what child ren starve or cry over the degradation of a parent; your business is legalized, and no one may interfere with you to it. No matter what mother may agonize over the loss of a son, or sister blush for the shame of a brother, you have the right to disregard them all and pursue your legal calling; you are licensed. You may fit up for your lawful trade, you may use all your arts to induce visitors, you may skillfully expose to view your choicest wines and captivating beverages; you may then induce thirst by all contrivances, producing a raging appetite for drinks, and then you may supply to the full, because it is lawful; you have paid for it; you have a license.

You may allow boys, almost children, to frequent your saloons; you may hold the cup to their lips, but you must not let them drink that is unlawful. But while you have special privileges for the money you pay, this poor privilege of selling to children is denied you. Here the parents have a right to say. Leave my son to me until the law gives you the right to destroy. Do not anticipate that terrible moment when I can assert for him no further right of protection; 'twill be soon enough for me, for his mother, for his sister, for his friends and the community to see him take his road to death. Give him to us in his childhood at least. Let us have the years of his youth, in which we can enjoy his innocence, to repay, in a small degree, for the love we have lavished upon him.

This is something you who now stand a prisoner at this bar, have not paid for; for this is not embraced in your license. For this offence the court sentences you to ten days imprisonment in the county jail, and that you pay a fine of seventy five dollars and costs; and that you stand committed until the fine and costs of this prosecution are paid.

WHO STRUCK BILLY PATTERSON?

A Singular Claim on a False Foundation Exploded by Investigation.

A telegram repeating an old story is about to start on its rounds again, and was received at this office yesterday. The story as told holds out a prospect of a solution to the mystery of "Who struck Billy Patterson?" but unfortunately for those who are very curious to to have the query answered, the narrative is not founded on the bed-rock of truth. It is to the effect that Mr. William Patterson, the father of Miss. Bonnaparte, who was a prominent and respected Baltimore merchant, was the "Billy Patterson" who received the mythical blow, and that he offered a reward of $1,000 in his will for the discovery of the perpetrator of the assault. The story goes on to describe the blow as having been given in Franklin County, Georgia, in 1857, the narrator being ignorant that that was two years after the Baltimore merchant's death. It is reirated that he owned land there which he had bought up on foreclosures of mortgages; that in the course of a riot, in which he wanted to act as peacemaker, he was felled by a blow which so injured him that Mr. Patterson left the reward to

CONTINUE THE SEARCH

for him even after his death. A Mrs. Tennie A. Corey, of Athol, Warren County, N. Y., comes forward as the daughter of the man who struck Billy Patterson, and wants a finger in this mythical $1,000.

The story, as it comes from a correspondent in Atlanta, Ga., says: "Mr. Patterson's will containing the clause perpetuating the reward offered for the discovery of the man who had struck him, is on record in the office of the clerk of the court in the counties of Franklin and Elbert. Mrs. Corey writes to the ordinary of Franklin County as follows:

"My father struck Billy Patterson. It was a great many years ago, or at least I suppose it was, as I was a very small child when he told me about it. He is dead now. As near as I can find out he was wild and mischievous when young, and ran away from his home in Vermont, where he was born and raised by tender parents. He was of a roving disposition, and among other places which he visited was Franklin County, Georgia. He was fond of sport he attended most of the public affairs. He attended the one in Georgia—I say the one in Georgia, because he left Georgia as soon as possible, and never returned to see how Billy Patterson came out. He said when the row began and Mr. Peacemaker, as he called Billy, stuck his name in to break up the sport, he just leveled him, and "dug out" as soon as possible, and

He went to Cleveland, Ohio, and as he grew older and wiser he began to grow stricter, and became as good an engineer as was ever on the road, and run fifteen years on one road, besides others. My mother went from this place to Ohio and married my father, and I was born there. We came back here to live. My father's name was George W. Tillotson. He never knew there was a will made, and I am not sure that he would have cared to have sold, as he had money enough; but as I am an invalid I might as well have the money if it is still offered." The ordinary of Franklin County has had a transcript of the will taken, and has forwarded it to Mrs. Corey, at Athol, N. Y. The next step will probably be a demand upon the representatives of the late Mr. Patterson for the money, and, in the event of a refusal to pay it, the matter will become a subject of litigation in one of the United States district courts of New York."

Mr. Patterson's will may be of record in the counties of Franklin and Elbert, Ga., if he had land or other possessions there, but the original will is of record in the Register of Wills' office in Baltimore, where it was hunted up by a Sun reporter, and found to contain no such clause as described

IN THE ATLANTA STORY.

The will is a very voluminous document. It is a paper which has often been quoted from, and is in some sense historical. It was made in 1827, with various codicils up to the time of his death. The will was proved in February, 1853, a few days after his death.—From the Baltimore Sun.

The Model Wife.

Scripture and history and poetry vie with one another sounding the praises of the model wife. The man who is blessed with a companion worthy the name of a model wife can snap his fingers in the faces of all the old bachelors that ever breathed, and give them points each day in every exalted pleasure that makes life worth living. There is no danger of his supplying for a divorce.

Unfortunately for the married men of this generation the model wives are most all dead. The struggle for existence was too much for them. The reckless, silent, self-sacrifice needed to build up a model domestic character could only be met and borne as long as there was a living appreciation of the personal laws of duty that underlie all sorts of ideal existence. The men who appreciated model wives and were in return willing to be model husbands were so few that the good wives—that is, the model wives—grew discouraged and took to their graves or some more congenial occupation.

The few model wives that are left are cherished by their husbands beyond even their cigars or their horses. The model wife of the workingman, clerk or business man has some appreciation of the 10,000 little labors, petty cares and annoyances that her husband has to go through each day in his workshop or office. She considers that such worrying cares are a part of the duties by which her husband makes a living for himself, for her and for the children, if there are any. And when the husband comes home from his work, tired, perhaps cross, and hungry and out of sorts, she is always ready to meet him with some quiet and gentle good cheer. Her own person is attractive and restful to him. She always has some pleasant scheme in mind to make his home hours delightful to him, and so makes herself indispensableand a constant joy.

The model wife does not see how many poor and silly and exciting things she can say to her tired husband. If she has anything to ask she waits until he is rested and fed. She invites pleasant people to her home, not to show how many rich things she has, but to make her husband's home hours pass cheerfully. She knows that if she is half a woman no other can displace her in her husband's affections. She is always more attractive in her manners to her husband than to other men. She is the genius of the household. But, unfortunately, most of them are dead. —Philadelphia Times.

Zeb Vance's Denominational Experience.

I heard Zeb Vance telling how he captured he vote of a backwoods settlement in North Carolina when he first ran for Congress. He said he had never been in the settlement and did not know the boys. He rode over the mountains and found about sixty sovereigns at a cross-road grocery, and he got down and hitched his horse and began to make their acquaintance and crack his jokes around, and thought he was getting along pretty well with them, but he noticed an old man with shaggy eyebrows and big brass spectacles sitting on a chunk and marking in the sand with a stick. The old man didn't seem to pay any attention to Vance, and after a while Vance concluded that the old man was their wellwisher of the flock and that it was necessary to capture him, so he sidled close up to him and the old man got up and shook himself, and leaned forward on his stick and said solemnly:

"You are Mr. Vance, I believe."

"Yes, sir," said Vance.

"And you have come over here to see my boys about their votes, I believe?"

"Yes, sir," said Vance, "that is my business."

"Well, sir," said the old man, "afore you proceed with that business I would like to ax you a few questions."

"Certainly, sir; certainly," said Vance.

"What church mout you belong to?" said the old man.

That was a sockdolager—Vance did not belong to any church. He knew that religion and meeting was a big thing in the backwoods and controlled their politics, but he didn't know what their religion was for North Carolina was powerfully spotted. But he squared himself for the responsibility, and says he: "Well, now, my friend, I will tell you about that, for it is a fair question. Of course it is. Well, you see, my grandfather was born in Scotland, and you know that, over in Scotland everybody is a Presbyterian." Here he paused to note the effect, but saw no sign of sympathy with his grandpa.

"But my grandmother came from England, and over there everybody belongs to the Episcopal church." He paused again, and the old man marked another mark in the sand and spit his tobacco way off.

"But my father was born in this country in a methodist settlement, and so he grew up a methodist." Still no sign of approval from the old man, and so Vance took his last shot and said: "But my good old mother was a Baptist, and it's my opinion that a man has got to go under water to go to heaven."

The old man walked up and taking him by the hand said: "Well, you are all right, Mr. Vance," and then turning to the crowd, said: "Boys, he'll do, and you may vote for him. I thought he looked like a Baptist." And the old man slowly drew a flask from his pocket and handed it to Vance to seal his faith.—Ark. Rep in Atlanta Constitution.

The horse had stopped and refused to budge, seemingly aware that the two young lady tourists were novices at driving. "Jennie, what in the world shall we do? The outrageous brute refuses to budge." "Laura, there is an awful wicked word that I have heard men use, but—" "Oh, say, I'll tell what won't be wrong; I'll say one-half and you the other. Gosh!" "Darn!" "Gosh!" "Darn!" But the horse stood still. "He don't appear to understand us, Jennie," said Laura despondingly. "No, the horse don't, but the devil does, Laura."
